- 1 In availing itself of the opportunity provided in the Collective Complaints Procedure Protocol (CCPP - Article 7§2) the European Trade Union Confederation (ETUC) would like to submit the following observations. The ETUC welcomes the fact that the respondent State has ratified not only the Revised European Social Charter (RESC)¹ but also the Collective Complaints Procedure Protocol (CCPP). However, the ETUC would invite the Government to take the appropriate steps to accept all provisions of the RESC.

Introduction

- 2 The main content of the complaint is described in the Decision on admissibility of 4 July 2017 and contains mainly two elements:
 - (1) the Gender wage gap,
 - (2) the (under-)representation in decision-making positions within private companies.
- 3 From the very outset, the ETUC would like to highlight that it is strongly committed to achieving equality between women and men. In its Constitution the ETUC clearly states that it - will work throughout Europe for [...]
 - the elimination of all forms of discrimination, based on sex, age, colour, race, sexual orientation, nationality, religious or philosophical beliefs or political opinions;
 - the promotion of equal opportunities and equal treatment between men and women; [...]²
- 4 The ETUC priorities are currently outlined in the Paris Action Programme (2015-2019) and the ETUC Action Programme on Gender Equality 2016 – 2019, and include in particular:
 - Mainstreaming gender into all ETUC policies;
 - Achieving equal pay between women and men;
 - Eliminating the gender gap in decision-making bodies.³
- 5 Against this background, these Observations aim at fulfilling these objectives by providing the European Committee of Social Rights (ECSR or Committee) with as much as possible consistent and comprehensive information on the problems at issue. The Observations will be divided into three parts the first of which will be attributed to the general framework (Part I) whereas the second will deal with the country-specific situation including the relevant international case law concerning the respondent State (Part II) before finally arriving at the Conclusions (Part III).
- 6 At an editorial level, it is indicated that all quotations will be governed by the following principles: they focus on the issues at stake (while still showing the relevant context) and will be ordered chronologically (beginning with the newest text). Emphases in bold are added by the ETUC;⁴ eventual footnotes are, in principle, omitted. Each time Article 20 of the Charter is mentioned it also includes Article 1§1 of the (First) Additional Protocol which has the same content for those countries which have ratified only the latter provision. Following the Committee's General Introduction to Conclusions 2012, the content of Article 4§3 of the Charter on the right of equal pay is now considered to be included in Article 20 of the Charter.

³ See for further information: <https://www.etuc.org/issue/gender-equality>.

⁴ Where the original text contains emphases they are highlighted in italics.

Therefore, each time these Observations refer to Article 20 of the Charter in relation to equal pay they include also Article 4§3 of the Charter unless otherwise specified.

I. General framework

- 7 As Part I, the description of the 'General framework' is setting the foundation for the country-specific assessment in Part II.

A. International law and material

- 8 The importance and legal significance of international standards and their interpretation and application⁵ is widely recognised. Accordingly, the collective complaint refers in several respects to international standards and the respective case law (in particular CEDAW). Nevertheless, the ETUC would like to add pertinent references to international law and material to the description provided in the complaints because all following International Organisations attribute a great importance to the principle of equality between men and women be it in their standard-setting, the respective case law or in other fields like research, projects, studies etc.
- 9 Unless stated otherwise the respondent State has ratified all the following instruments referred to below.⁶

1. United Nations

- 10 The United Nations (UN) provide for a wide-ranging set of standards (see below a) to d)) and further pertinent material (see below e)).

a) Universal Declaration of Human Rights

- 11 The main provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UDHR) relating to equality between men and women may be quoted as follows:

Article 1

All human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights. They are endowed with reason and conscience and should act towards one another in a spirit of brotherhood. [...]

Article 23

[...] (2) Everyone, without any discrimination, has the right to equal pay for equal work.

b) International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights

(1) Text

- 12 The main provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR)⁷ relating to equality between men and women might be quoted as follows:

Article 2

⁵ As to legal impact of the 'Interpretation in harmony with other rules of international law' see the ETUC Observations in No. 85/2012 Swedish Trade Union Confederation (LO) and Swedish Confederation of Professional Employees (TCO) v. Sweden - Case Document no. 4, Observations by the European Trade Union Confederation (ETUC), paras. 32 and 33.

⁶ As legally non-binding instruments, this list does obviously not include the UDHR nor Recommendations nor any 'Further pertinent material'.

⁷ Adopted by General Assembly resolution 2200A (XXI) of 16 December 1966; entry into force 23 March 1976.

1. Each State Party to the present Covenant undertakes to respect and to ensure to all individuals within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction the rights recognized in the present Covenant, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status. [...]

Article 3

The States Parties to the present Covenant undertake to ensure the equal right of men and women to the enjoyment of all civil and political rights set forth in the present Covenant. [...]

Article 26

All persons are equal before the law and are entitled without any discrimination to the equal protection of the law. In this respect, the law shall prohibit any discrimination and guarantee to all persons equal and effective protection against discrimination on any ground such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status. [...]

(2) General interpretation

13 In its General Comment No. 28 on Article 3 ICCPR⁸, the competent organ to interpret the ICCPR, the Human Rights Committee (CCPR), stated i.a.

31. [...] The Committee has also often observed in reviewing States parties' reports that a large proportion of women are employed in areas which are not protected by labour laws and that prevailing customs and traditions discriminate against women, particularly with regard to access to better paid employment and to equal pay for work of equal value. States parties should review their legislation and practices and take the lead in implementing all measures necessary to eliminate discrimination against women in all fields, for example by prohibiting discrimination by private actors in areas such as employment, education, political activities and the provision of accommodation, goods and services. States parties should report on all these measures and provide information on the remedies available to victims of such discrimination.

c) International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

14 As complementary to the ICCPR the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (ICESCR)⁹ provides in particular for the protection against discrimination (see below (1)) and for social rights. Its competent organ, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (CESCR) to interpret this instrument has developed a case law in this respect (see below (2)).

The States Parties to the present Covenant undertake to guarantee that the rights enunciated in the present Covenant will be exercised without discrimination of any kind as to race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status [...]

Article 3

The States Parties to the present Covenant undertake to ensure the equal right of men and women to the enjoyment of all economic, social and cultural rights set forth in the present Covenant.

Article 7

The States Parties to the present Covenant recognize the right of everyone to the enjoyment of just and favourable conditions of work which ensure, in particular:

(a) Remuneration which provides all workers, as a minimum, with:

- (i) Fair wages and equal remuneration for work of equal value without distinction of any kind, in particular women being guaranteed conditions of work not inferior to those enjoyed by men, with equal pay for equal work; [...]
- (c) Equal opportunity for everyone to be promoted in his employment to an appropriate higher level, subject to no considerations other than those of seniority and competence; [...]

(2) General interpretation

15 Recently, in its General Comment No. 23 concerning Article 7 ICESCR¹⁰ CESCR defined in more detail the content of para. (a)(i) as follows:

11. Not only should workers receive equal remuneration when they perform the same or similar jobs, but their remuneration should also be equal even when their work is completely different but nonetheless of equal value when assessed by objective criteria. This requirement goes beyond only wages or pay to include other payments or benefits paid directly or indirectly to workers. [...]

12. The extent to which equality is being achieved requires an ongoing objective evaluation of whether the work is of equal value and whether the remuneration received is equal. It should cover a broad selection of functions. Since the focus should be on the “value” of the work, evaluation factors should include skills, responsibilities and effort required by the worker, as well as working conditions. It could be based on a comparison of rates of remuneration across organizations, enterprises and professions.

13. Objective job evaluation is important to avoid indirect discrimination when determining rates of remuneration and comparing the relative value of different jobs. For example, a distinction between full-time and part-time work — such as the payment of bonuses only to full-time employees — might indirectly discriminate against women employees if a higher percentage of women are part-time workers. Similarly, the objective evaluation of the work must be free from gender bias. [...]

d) Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women

16 The Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW)¹¹ can be considered as the universal core convention on equality between men and women. It provides also for specific protection in employment (see below (1)) and for social rights. Its competent organ, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) to interpret this instrument has developed a case law in this respect (see below (2) and (2)(b)).

(1) Text

Article 1

For the purposes of the present Convention, the term "discrimination against women" shall mean any distinction, exclusion or restriction made on the basis of sex which has the effect or purpose of impairing or nullifying the recognition, enjoyment or exercise by women, irrespective of their marital status, on a basis of equality of men and women, of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the political, economic, social, cultural, civil or any other field.

Article 2

States Parties condemn discrimination against women in all its forms, agree to pursue by all appropriate means and without delay a policy of eliminating discrimination against women and, to this end, undertake:

¹⁰ General Comment No. 23 (2016) on the right to just and favourable conditions of work (article 7 ICESCR); see General comment No. 20 (2009) on non-discrimination in economic, social and cultural rights.

¹¹ Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, 18.12.1979.

- (a) To embody the principle of the equality of men and women in their national constitutions or other appropriate legislation if not yet incorporated therein and to ensure, through law and other appropriate means, the practical realization of this principle;
- (b) To adopt appropriate legislative and other measures, including sanctions where appropriate, prohibiting all discrimination against women;
- (c) To establish legal protection of the rights of women on an equal basis with men and to ensure through competent national tribunals and other public institutions the effective protection of women against any act of discrimination;
- (d) To refrain from engaging in any act or practice of discrimination against women and to ensure that public authorities and institutions shall act in conformity with this obligation;
- (e) To take all appropriate measures to eliminate discrimination against women by any person, organization or enterprise;
- (f) To take all appropriate measures, including legislation, to modify or abolish existing laws, regulations, customs and practices which constitute discrimination against women;
- (g) To repeal all national penal provisions which constitute discrimination against women.

Article 3

States Parties shall take in all fields, in particular in the political, social, economic and cultural fields, all appropriate measures, including legislation, to ensure the full development and advancement of women, for the purpose of guaranteeing them the exercise and enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms on a basis of equality with men. [...]

Article 11

1. States Parties shall take all appropriate measures to eliminate discrimination against women in the field of employment in order to ensure, on a basis of equality of men and women, the same rights, in particular:

- (a) The right to work as an inalienable right of all human beings;
- (b) The right to the same employment opportunities, including the application of the same criteria for selection in matters of employment;
- (c) The right to free choice of profession and employment, the right to promotion, job security and all benefits and conditions of service and the right to receive vocational training and retraining, including apprenticeships, advanced vocational training and recurrent training;
- (d) The right to equal remuneration, including benefits, and to equal treatment in respect of work of equal value, as well as equality of treatment in the evaluation of the quality of work; [...]

(2) General interpretation

(a) Concerning the Gender pay gap

17 As early as 1989 in its General Recommendation No. 13¹² the CEDAW defined in more detail the content of 'Equal remuneration for work of equal value' by recommending to the States Parties i.a. that:

2. They should consider the study, development and adoption of job evaluation systems based on gender-neutral criteria that would facilitate the comparison of the value of those jobs of a different nature, in which women presently predominate, with those jobs in which men presently predominate, and they should include the results achieved in their reports to the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women;

3. They should support, as far as practicable, the creation of implementation machinery and encourage the efforts of the parties to collective agreements, where they apply, to ensure the application of the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value.

¹² General recommendation No. 13: Equal remuneration for work of equal value, CEDAW, Eighth session (1989)), contained in document A/44/38. Further General Recommendations might be relevant, such as

- No. 16 (1991) unpaid women workers in rural and urban family enterprises,
- No. 28 (2010) The Core Obligations of States Parties under Article 2 of the CEDAW,
- No. 33 (2015) on women's access to justice.

(b) Concerning the (under-)representation of women in decision-making bodies in enterprises

18 In more recent times the CEDAW has also criticised the (under-)representation of women in decision-making bodies in enterprises. Although it has not (yet) provided a 'General Recommendation' on this issue it appears important to highlight the following extracts of 'Concluding Observations' on certain countries which have not ratified the CCPP, whereas extracts of similar CEDAW conclusions on countries which have ratified the CCPP are quoted in Part II.A. of the respective ETUC Observations.

(i) Estonia (2016)¹³

28. [...] The Committee is also concerned about: [...]

(d) The significant underrepresentation of women in management positions in private companies; [...]

29. The Committee recommends that the State party: [...]

(d) Increase the representation of women in management positions in private companies, including through temporary special measures; [...]

(ii) Slovakia (2015)¹⁴

28. The Committee notes the amendment to the Labour Code in 2011 to provide for the equal treatment of women and men in employment and an increase in the representation of women on corporate boards, but is concerned:

(a) That significant horizontal and vertical gender segregation exists in the labour market, including the persistently low representation of women compared with men in economic decision-making positions, such as on the supervisory board of companies and in executive positions, and that the size of the gender pay gap remains large, women's high levels of education notwithstanding; [...]

29. The Committee recommends that the State party: [...]

(b) Enhance measures to achieve the equal and full participation of women in decision-making in the economic sphere, in particular on the management and supervisory boards of public and private companies; [...]

(iii) Spain (2015)¹⁵

28. The Committee [...] is particularly concerned about the following issues: [...]

(b) The low representation of women in managerial and decision-making positions and on boards of directors (18.2 per cent) and that neither Organic Law No. 3/2007 on effective equality for men and women nor Law No. 31/2014 amending the Corporations Act provides sanctions for the non-enforcement of the required gender balance on the boards of directors of large companies; [...]

29. The Committee recommends that the State party: [...]

(d) *Take measures to achieve the equal and full participation of women in decision-making in the economic sphere, in particular on the boards of directors of large companies, by introducing mandatory quotas;

(iv) Denmark (2015)¹⁶

29. The Committee welcomes the establishment in 2011 of a tribunal for equal pay, but remains concerned at: [...]

¹⁶ Concluding observations on the eighth periodic report of Denmark, CEDAW/C/DNK/CO/8, 11.03.2015.

(c) The absence of clearly defined sanctions for companies that fail to meet targets for equal gender representation; [...]

30. The Committee recommends that the State party: [...]

(c) Provide for adequate and clearly defined sanctions for companies that fail to meet targets for equal gender representation and provide specific mechanisms for the prompt enforcement of such sanctions; [...]

e) Further pertinent material

The importance of the principle of equality between men and women is furthermore underlined by the inclusion in the UN 2030 agenda. In its Sustainable Development Goals (SDG) Goal 5. ('Achieve gender equality and empower all women and girls') contains i.a. the following elements:

5.1 End all forms of discrimination against all women and girls everywhere [...]

5.5 Ensure women's full and effective participation and equal opportunities for leadership at all levels of decision- making in political, economic and public life [...]

5.c Adopt and strengthen sound policies and enforceable legislation for the promotion of gender equality and the empowerment of all women and girls at all levels [...]

2. International Labour Organisation

19 Out of the eight core Conventions of the International Labour Organisation (ILO), the two anti-discrimination Conventions No. 100 and 111 are of specific relevance for this collective complaint.

a) *Convention No. 100*¹⁷

(1) Text

Article 1

For the purpose of this Convention

(a) the term remuneration includes the ordinary, basic or minimum wage or salary and any additional emoluments whatsoever payable directly or indirectly, whether in cash or in kind, by the employer to the worker and arising out of the worker's employment;

(b) the term equal remuneration for men and women workers for work of equal value refers to rates of remuneration established without discrimination based on sex.

Article 2

1. Each Member shall, by means appropriate to the methods in operation for determining rates of remuneration, promote and, in so far as is consistent with such methods, ensure the application to all workers of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women workers for work of equal value.

2. This principle may be applied by means of

(a) national laws or regulations;

(b) legally established or recognised machinery for wage determination;

(c) collective agreements between employers and workers; or

(d) a combination of these various means.

Article 3

1. Where such action will assist in giving effect to the provisions of this Convention measures shall be taken to promote objective appraisal of jobs on the basis of the work to be performed.

2. The methods to be followed in this appraisal may be decided upon by the authorities responsible for the determination of rates of remuneration, or, where such rates are determined by collective agreements, by the parties thereto.

¹⁷ Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100). Adoption: 29.06.1951, entry into force: 23.05.1953 - Status: Up-to-date instrument (Fundamental Convention).

3. Differential rates between workers which correspond, without regard to sex, to differences, as determined by such objective appraisal, in the work to be performed shall not be considered as being contrary to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women workers for work of equal value.

Article 4

Each Member shall co-operate as appropriate with the employers' and workers' organisations concerned for the purpose of giving effect to the provisions of this Convention.

(2) General interpretation

(a) General Survey 2012

20 In its General Survey 2012,¹⁸ the Committee on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations (CEACR) described the requirements which derive from Convention No. 100 in relation to the gender pay gap as follows:

Gender pay gap

668. Pay differentials remain one of the most persistent forms of inequality between women and men. Although explicit policies of providing lower pay for women have for the most part been relegated to the past, the gender pay gap remains one of the most obvious examples of structural gender discrimination. The gender pay gap varies from country to country, and between different sectors within a country. Globally, women earn approximately 77.1 per cent of what men earn (a pay gap of 22.9 per cent) though in some countries women earn considerably less. If wages of part-time workers are included in the calculation, the gap can increase to much higher levels.

669. Many countries have made progress in reducing the pay gap, though in others it has stagnated for many years, or even increased. Even where gender pay differences are narrowing, they are doing so extremely slowly: at the current rate it is estimated that another 75 years will be needed to bridge the gap. The continued persistence of significant gender pay gaps requires that governments, along with employers' and workers' organizations, take more proactive measures to raise awareness, make assessments, and promote and enforce the application of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. Collecting, analysing and disseminating this information is important in identifying and addressing inequality in remuneration. [...]

Equal value: The cornerstone of the Convention

[...] 673. *The concept of "work of equal value" lies at the heart of the fundamental right of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, and the promotion of equality. Due to historical attitudes and stereotypes regarding women's aspirations, preferences and capabilities, certain jobs are held predominantly or exclusively by women (such as in caring professions) and others by men (such as in construction). Often "female jobs" are undervalued in comparison with work of equal value performed by men when determining wage rates. The concept of "work of equal value" is fundamental to tackling occupational sex segregation in the labour market, which exists in almost every country, as it permits a broad scope of comparison, including, but going beyond equal remuneration for "equal", "the same" or "similar" work, and also encompasses work that is of an entirely different nature, which is nevertheless of equal value.

674. "Value" while not defined in the Convention, refers to the worth of a job for the purpose of computing remuneration. "Value" in the context of the Convention indicates that something other than market forces should be used to ensure the application of the principle, as market forces may be inherently gender-biased. [...]

675. While Article 1 indicates what cannot be considered in determining rates of remuneration, Article 3 presupposes the use of appropriate techniques for objective job evaluation to determine value, comparing factors such as skill, effort, responsibilities and working conditions.

¹⁸ Report III(1B): Giving globalization a human face, General Survey on the fundamental Conventions concerning rights at work in light of the ILO Declaration on Social Justice for a Fair Globalization, 2008, 2012.

Comparing the relative value of jobs in occupations which may involve different types of skills, responsibilities or working conditions, but which are nevertheless of equal value overall, is essential in order to eliminate pay discrimination resulting from the failure to recognize the value of work performed by women and men free from gender bias. The Committee recalls that the principle has been applied to compare the remuneration received by men and women engaged in different occupations, such as wardens in sheltered accommodation for the elderly (predominantly women) and security guards in office premises (predominantly men); or school meal supervisors (predominantly women) and garden and park supervisors (predominantly men). [...]

679. *Noting that many countries still retain legal provisions that are narrower than the principle laid down in the Convention, as they do not give expression to the concept of “work of equal value”, and that such provisions hinder progress in eradicating gender-based pay discrimination, the Committee again urges the governments of those countries to take the necessary steps to amend their legislation. Such legislation should not only provide for equal remuneration for equal, the same or similar work, but also address situations where men and women perform different work that is nevertheless of equal value. [...]

Comparing jobs, determining value

695. The concept of “equal value” requires some method of measuring and comparing the relative value of different jobs. There needs to be an examination of the respective tasks involved, undertaken on the basis of entirely objective and non-discriminatory criteria to avoid the assessment being tainted by gender bias. While the Convention does not prescribe any specific method for such an examination, Article 3 presupposes the use of appropriate techniques for objective job evaluation, comparing factors such as skill, effort, responsibilities and working conditions. Article 3 also makes it clear that differential rates between workers are compatible with the principle of the Convention if they correspond, without regard to sex, to differences determined by such evaluation. [...]

Scope of comparison

697. Application of the Convention's principle is not limited to comparisons between men and women in the same establishment or enterprise. It allows for a much broader comparison to be made between jobs performed by men and women in different places or enterprises, or between different employers. Ensuring a broad scope of comparison is essential for the application of the principle of equal remuneration given the continued prevalence of occupational sex segregation. [...]

698. The reach of comparison between jobs performed by women and men should be as wide as possible, in the context of the level at which wage policies, systems and structures are coordinated. As effective application of the principle of the Convention is needed, where women are more heavily concentrated in certain sectors or occupations, there is a risk that the possibilities for comparison at the enterprise or establishment level will be insufficient. In certain countries the scope of comparison is limited to the same employer in legislation. The European Committee of Social Rights has also considered under the European Social Charter that “[a]s comparisons need to be made in order to determine whether women and men really do receive equal pay, the Committee has consistently found that „the possibility to look outside an enterprise for an appropriate comparison should exist where necessary” (Conclusions XIII-1, p. 121)”. Similarly, the Committee of Experts has also asked certain governments to extend the scope of comparison beyond the enterprise. [...]

Objective job evaluation methods

[...] 701. Whatever methods are used for the objective evaluation of jobs, particular care must be taken to ensure that they are free from gender bias: it is important to ensure that the selection of factors for comparison, the weighting of such factors and the actual comparison carried out are not discriminatory, either directly or indirectly. Often skills considered to be “female”, such as manual dexterity and those required in the caring professions, are undervalued or even overlooked, in comparison with traditionally “male” skills, such as heavy lifting. In addition, if job evaluation is to make a positive contribution to resolving wage discrimination and promoting equality, there must be a legal and administrative framework enabling workers to claim equal remuneration on the basis of the assessed value of their jobs, together with a right to claim redress when job evaluation systems have been found to be discriminatory.

702. A number of analytical job evaluation methods have been developed, for example: in Sweden, "Steps to Pay Equity"; in Switzerland, the ABAKABA and EVALFRI methods; and in Spain the ISOS methods. With respect to the ABAKABA method, the Committee has noted that it takes into consideration characteristics considered to be masculine and feminine, and includes criteria such as repetitiveness and precision of movement, responsibility for the life of others, responsibility for the environment, the number of work interruptions (for example in secretarial and clerical work), empathy and the ability to organize, which are often linked to occupations in which women are predominantly employed. [...]

(a) General Survey 2012

Chapter 3 - Equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation (Convention No. 111)

Introduction

731. [...] As a first step, it is essential to acknowledge that no society is free from discrimination and that continuous action is required to address it.

732. [...] The implementation of the national equality policy presupposes the adoption of a range of specific and concrete measures, including in most cases the need for a clear and comprehensive legislative framework, and ensuring that the right to equality and non-discrimination is effective in practice. Proactive measures are required to address the underlying causes of discrimination and de facto inequalities resulting from deeply entrenched discrimination. [...]

Thematic issues

Defining discrimination

743. Clear and comprehensive definitions of what constitutes discrimination in employment and occupation are instrumental in identifying and addressing the many manifestations in which it may occur. [...] Any discrimination – in law or in practice, direct or indirect – falls within the scope of the Convention.

Direct and indirect discrimination

744. Direct discrimination occurs when less favourable treatment is explicitly or implicitly based on one or more prohibited grounds. [...]

745. Indirect discrimination refers to apparently neutral situations, regulations or practices which in fact result in unequal treatment of persons with certain characteristics. It occurs when the same condition, treatment or criterion is applied to everyone, but results in a disproportionately harsh impact on some persons on the basis of characteristics such as race, colour, sex or religion, and is not closely related to the inherent requirements of the job. In referring to the “effect” of a distinction, exclusion or preference, it is clear that intention to discriminate is not an element of the definition in the Convention, which covers all discrimination irrespective of the intention of the author of a discriminatory act. The Convention also covers situations in which inequality is observed in the absence of a clearly identifiable author, as in some cases of indirect discrimination or occupational segregation based on sex. Challenges related to structural discrimination therefore need to be addressed under the Convention. [...]

Grounds of discrimination: An evolving area

Sex discrimination and gender equality

782. Under the Convention, sex discrimination includes distinctions based on the biological characteristics, as well as unequal treatment arising from socially constructed roles and responsibilities assigned to a particular sex (gender). Gender roles and responsibilities are affected by age, race, class, ethnicity and religion, and by the geographical, economic and political environment. [...]

783. The protection against discrimination applies to both men and women, although considerable inequalities, in law and in practice, exist to the detriment of women. Despite the requirement under the Convention to repeal discriminatory legal provisions, laws discriminating directly or indirectly against women have not yet been relegated to the past. Women are also over-represented in informal and atypical jobs, including part-time jobs, face greater barriers in gaining access to posts of responsibility, and continue to bear the unequal burden of family responsibilities. Stereotyped assumptions regarding women’s aspirations and capabilities, their suitability for certain jobs or their interest or availability for full-time jobs, continue to lead to the segregation of men and women in education and training, and consequently in the labour market.

3. Council of Europe

22 The Council of Europe (CoE) is characterised by two main human rights instruments, the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR, see below a)) and the European Social Charter (ESC, see below b)) which is at the very core of this complaint. However, there are also other relevant documents (see below c)).

a) European Convention on Human Rights

23 In its fundamental Article 14, the ECHR²¹ prohibits discrimination²² in the following terms:

Article 14 - Prohibition of discrimination

The enjoyment of the rights and freedoms set forth in this Convention shall be secured without discrimination on any ground such as sex, race, colour, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, association with a national minority, property, birth or other status.

However, this protection requires that the right referred to falls in the ambit of one of the rights enshrined in the Convention or its Protocols. As far as equal pay is concerned the sole Convention right could possibly be Article 1 of Protocol No. 1 (Protection of Property).

- 24 This lack of protection against discrimination in general has been closed by the adoption of Protocol No. 12,²³ but it still lacks ratification to a large degree.²⁴

Article 1 - General prohibition of discrimination

1. The enjoyment of any right set forth by law shall be secured without discrimination on any ground such as sex, race, colour, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, association with a national minority, property, birth or other status.

2. No one shall be discriminated against by any public authority on any ground such as those mentioned in paragraph 1.

- 25 So far, no cases or ECtHR's rulings on equal pay are known.

b) European Social Charter (ESC)²⁵

Article 4 – The right to a fair remuneration

With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right to a fair remuneration, the Parties undertake: [...]

3 to recognise the right of men and women workers to equal pay for work of equal value; [...]

The exercise of these rights shall be achieved by freely concluded collective agreements, by statutory wage-fixing machinery, or by other means appropriate to national conditions.

Article 20 – The right to equal opportunities and equal treatment in matters of employment and occupation without discrimination on the grounds of sex

With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right to equal opportunities and equal treatment in matters of employment and occupation without discrimination on the grounds of sex, the Parties undertake to recognise that right and to take appropriate measures to ensure or promote its application in the following fields:

- a access to employment, protection against dismissal and occupational reintegration;
- b vocational guidance, training, retraining and rehabilitation;
- c terms of employment and working conditions, including remuneration;
- d career development, including promotion.

Article E – Non-discrimination

The enjoyment of the rights set forth in this Charter shall be secured without discrimination on any ground such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national extraction or social origin, health, association with a national minority, birth or other status.

(2) Compilation of case law (Digest 2008)

26 The 'Digest of the Case Law of the European Committee of Social Rights' (Digest 2008) compiles the main principles deriving from the ECSR's case law based on Statements of Interpretation, Conclusions or Decisions.

27 Concerning the principle of equal pay for work of equal value as enshrined in Article 4§3 of the Charter, the Digest 2008 states the following:

(a) Article 4§3

Article 4§3 guarantees the right to equal pay without discrimination on grounds of sex. This is one aspect of the right to equal opportunities in matters of employment guaranteed by Article 20. As a result, the case-law under Article 20 (see infra) applies mutatis mutandis to Article 4§3. Only aspects specifically linked to equal pay are dealt with hereinafter.

The situation as regards equal pay in countries which have accepted both Article 20 and Article 4§3 is examined exclusively under Article 20 and these countries are no longer required to submit a report on the application of Article 4§3.

The principle of equal pay

Women and men are entitled to "equal pay for work of equal value". This means that the equal pay principle applies to the same work and to "mixed jobs", that is ones performed by both women and men, but also to work of the same value.

The principle of equality should cover all the elements of pay, that is basic or minimum wages or salary plus all other benefits paid directly or indirectly in cash or kind by the employer to the worker by reason of the latter's employment.

It must also apply between full-time and part-time employees, covering the calculation of hourly wages, pay increases and the components of pay.

Guarantees of enforcement

Legislative means

The right of women and men to "equal pay for work of equal value" must be expressly provided for in legislation.

As far as setting wage levels is concerned, states are free to choose their own methods and can treat this as a matter to be decided by collective bargaining. Domestic law must however ensure that violations of the principle of equal pay will be sanctioned and lay down the general rules applying to labour and management when they are negotiating wages (for example, differential pay scales and discriminatory clauses must be ruled out). If full equal pay cannot be achieved through collective bargaining, the state must intervene using legal wage-fixing methods or any other appropriate means.

Judicial safeguards

Domestic law must provide for appropriate and effective remedies in the event of alleged wage discrimination. Employees who claim that they have suffered discrimination must be able to take their case to court.

Domestic law should provide for an alleviation of the burden of proof in favour of the plaintiff in discrimination cases.

Anyone who suffers wage discrimination on grounds of sex must be entitled to adequate compensation, i.e. compensation that is sufficient to make good the damage suffered by the victim and act as a deterrent to the offender. In cases of unequal pay, any compensation must, as a minimum, cover the difference in pay.

Methods of classification and comparison and other measures

Appropriate classification methods must be devised enabling to compare the respective values of different jobs and carry out objective job appraisals in the various sectors of the economy, including those with a predominantly female labour force.

Domestic law must make provision for comparisons of pay and jobs to extend outside the company directly concerned where this is necessary for an appropriate comparison. The Committee views this as a crucial means of ensuring that job appraisal systems are effective under certain circumstances, particularly in companies where the workforce is largely, or even exclusively, female.

States must promote positive measures to narrow the pay gap, including:

- measures to improve the quality and coverage of wage statistics;
- steps to ensure that more attention is paid to equal pay for women and men in national action plans for employment.

28 As regards more generally the principle of equality between men and women provided for in Article 20 of the Charter, the Digest 2008 states the following:

(b) Article 20

Definitions and scope

Article 20 guarantees the right to equality at all stages of working life – access to employment, remuneration and other working conditions, including dismissal and other forms of detriment, vocational training and guidance and promotion. These words give Article 20 the status of specialis in relation to Article 1§2 of the Charter, which prohibits all discrimination at work on whatever ground.

The right to equal pay without discrimination on the grounds of sex is guaranteed by Article 4§3 and the relevant specific case-law is presented under this article (see above): The situation as to equal pay in States party which have accepted Articles 4§3 and 20 is examined under Article 20 only. Consequently, these States are no longer required to submit a report on the application of Article 4§3. [...]

Discrimination in breach of the Charter is constituted by a difference in treatment between people in comparable situations which does not pursue a legitimate aim and is not based on objective and reasonable grounds. In determining whether a legitimate aim is being pursued and the measures taken are reasonably proportionate, the Committee applies Article G.

Indirect discrimination occurs where a rule, identical for everyone, disproportionately affects men or women without a legitimate aim. Equal treatment of full-time and part-time employees is considered from this angle in particular in respect of social security issues. [...]

The principle of equality applies to all employees, in both the private and public sectors.

Means of enforcement

Legal framework

The right of women and men to equality must be guaranteed by a law. The Charter requires “states not only to provide for equal treatment but also to protect women and men from discrimination in employment and training. This means that they are obliged to enact a sufficiently detailed legislation explicitly imposing equal treatment in all aspects.” It is not sufficient merely to state the principle in the Constitution. [...]

It must be possible to set aside, withdraw, repeal or amend any provision in collective agreements, employment contracts or firms' internal regulations that is incompatible with the principle of equal treatment.

Right of appeal

National legislation must provide for appropriate and effective remedies in the event of alleged discrimination. Employees who consider that they have suffered discrimination must be able to take their case to an independent body.

The burden of proof must be shifted. The shift in the burden of proof consists in ensuring that where a person believes he or she has suffered as the result of non-compliance with the principle of equal treatment and establishes facts which make it reasonable to suppose that discrimination has occurred, the onus is on the defendant to prove that there has been no infringement of the principle of equal treatment. The purpose of this rule is to enable courts to deal with discrimination in the light of the effects produced by a rule, act, or practice and hence that the shift in the burden of proof is a key factor in the effective application of rules on protection against discrimination.

By analogy with the case-law in relation to Article 1§2, a number of other legal steps should be taken to make the right of appeal fully effective, such as authorising trade unions and other bodies to take action in employment discrimination cases, including action on behalf of individuals or setting up an independent body to promote equal treatment and provide legal assistance to victims.

Adequate compensation

Anyone who suffers discrimination on grounds of sex must be entitled to adequate compensation, i.e. compensation that is sufficient to make good the damage suffered by the victim and act as a deterrent to the offender.

Adequate compensation means:

- reinstatement or retention of employment and compensation for any pecuniary damage suffered in the event of unlawful or unfair dismissal;
- compensation proportionate to the damage suffered, i.e. to cover pecuniary and non-pecuniary damage, where the dismissed employee does not wish to be reinstated or continuation of the employment relationship is impossible;
- in all other cases, bringing the discrimination to an end and awarding compensation proportionate to the pecuniary and non-pecuniary damage suffered.

In accordance with these principles, the Committee considers that compensation should not be subject to an upper limit as this prevents it from being proportionate to the damage suffered and hence adequate.

When assessing the level of compensation, the Committee takes account of whether it is high enough to prevent employers from re-offending. For this purpose, it also considers any other administrative, civil or criminal penalties imposed on employers.

Protection against reprisals

Employees who try to enforce their right to equality must be legally protected against any form of reprisals from their employers, including not only dismissal, but also downgrading, changes to working conditions and so on. National legislation must provide for the same consequences where an employee is a victim of reprisal measures as those described above in the sections on appeal procedures and compensation. [...]

Particular rights of women

Equal opportunities and positive measures

Since "the aim and purpose of the Charter, being a human rights protection instrument, is to protect rights not merely theoretically, but also in fact" and conformity with the Charter cannot be ensured solely by the operation of legislation, states must take practical steps to promote equal opportunities.

Appropriate measures include:

- adopting and implementing national equal opportunities action plans;
- requiring individual undertakings to draw up enterprise or company plans to secure greater equality between women and men; [...]

There is no case-law on discrimination by results, such as the systematic granting of priority to women in sectors of activity in which they are under- represented.

(3) Statement of interpretation

29 Following the Digest 2008 the ECSR has adopted a specific Statement of Interpretation on 'equal pay comparisons' in the framework of Conclusions 2012:²⁶

Under Article 20, equal treatment between women and men includes the issue of equal pay for work of equal value. Usually, pay comparisons are made between persons within the same undertaking/company. However, there may be situations where, in order to be meaningful this comparison can only be made across companies/undertakings. Therefore, the Committee requires that it be possible to make pay comparisons across companies. It notes that at the very least, legislation should require pay comparisons across companies in one or more of the following situations:

- cases in which statutory rules apply to the working and pay conditions in more than one company;
- cases in which several companies are covered by a collective works agreement or regulations governing the terms and conditions of employment;
- cases in which the terms and conditions of employment are laid down centrally for more than one company within a holding (company) or conglomerate.

(4) Conclusions (2016) on (under-)representation of women in decision-making functions within the private sector

30 In more recent times the Committee has shown an increasing interest in the representation of women in decision-making functions. Indeed, it asked for example Armenia, Romania, Turkey and Ukraine as well as Belgium to provide information i.a. on (increasing) women's participation decision-making positions or posts or noted progress in relation to women's participation in decision making in Ireland.

31 The Committee of Ministers has adopted several Recommendations²⁷ which are in part relevant for the issues at stake.

- Recommendation No. R(85)2 on legal protection against sex discrimination exhorts member states to take or reinforce measures for the promotion of equality between women and men, including through legislation in the field of employment, social security and pensions, taxation, civil law, the acquisition and loss of nationality and political rights. The Appendix to the Recommendation refers to the need to give consideration to the adoption of special temporary measures designed to accelerate the realisation of de facto equality between men and women in those areas where inequalities exist. In addition, member states are encouraged to adopt suitable machineries and legislation containing effective remedies and sanctions in order to discourage discrimination.
- Recommendation No. R \(98\)14 on gender mainstreaming calls on member states to create an enabling environment and facilitate conditions for the implementation of gender mainstreaming in the public sector on the basis of the Council of Europe Report on Gender Mainstreaming. The report sets out the conceptual framework for gender mainstreaming and a methodology for its implementation, accompanied by examples of good practices.
- Recommendation Rec\(2007\)17 on gender equality standards and mechanisms provides an extensive list of measures to achieve gender equality in practice, taking into account human rights and the integration of a gender perspective in legislation in all sectors. It recommends specific gender equality standards in private and family life, education, science and culture, economic life, social protection, health, including sexual and reproductive matters, violence against women, trafficking in human beings, conflict and post-conflict situations and specific situation of vulnerable groups exposed to multiple discrimination. The Recommendation also puts forward strategies, mechanisms and tools to achieve gender equality, such as the implementation of complementary strategies; strong institutional mechanisms/national machinery for gender equality; studies and instruments to measure and evaluate progress on the situation of women and men, and the establishment of co-operation and partnerships.

4. European Union (EU)

32 Equality between women and men is one of the European Union's founding values. It goes back to 1957 when the principle of equal pay for equal work became part of the Treaty of Rome²⁸ as primary law²⁹ and later further developed also in secondary law (see below a)). The Court of Justice of the European Union (CJEU) has developed a very rich jurisprudence so far (see below b)). There is also further pertinent material for the purpose of dealing with this complaint (see below c)).

a) Legislative framework

(1) Primary Law

33 With the entry into force of the Treaty of Lisbon in 2009 several sources are relevant:

34 The Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union (CFREU), legally binding on all EU Member States by virtue of Article 6(1)(3) of the Treaty on the European Union (TEU), provides i.a.:

Article 21 - Non-discrimination

1. Any discrimination based on any ground such as sex, race, colour, ethnic or social origin, genetic features, language, religion or belief, political or any other opinion, membership of a national minority, property, birth, disability, age or sexual orientation shall be prohibited. [...]

Article 23 - Equality between women and men

Equality between women and men must be ensured in all areas, including employment, work and pay.

The principle of equality shall not prevent the maintenance or adoption of measures providing for specific advantages in favour of the under-represented sex.

35 Moreover, the principle is enshrined in the founding values of the EU:

Article 2

The Union is founded on the values of respect for human dignity, freedom, democracy, equality, the rule of law and respect for human rights, including the rights of persons belonging to minorities. These values are common to the Member States in a society in which pluralism, non-discrimination, tolerance, justice, solidarity and equality between women and men prevail.

36 The Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union (TFEU) lays down the 'gender mainstreaming principle:

Article 8³⁰

In all its activities, the Union shall aim to eliminate inequalities, and to promote equality, between men and women.

37 In the Title on 'Social Policy' a specific article is devoted to the principle of equality between men and women, in particular in relation to 'equal pay'.

²⁸ See for further details <http://ec.europa.eu/justice/gender-equality/>.

²⁹ Art. 119 EC-Treaty.

³⁰ (ex Article 3(2) TEC).

*Article 157*³¹

1. Each Member State shall ensure that the principle of equal pay for male and female workers for equal work or work of equal value is applied.

2. For the purpose of this Article, 'pay' means the ordinary basic or minimum wage or salary and any other consideration, whether in cash or in kind, which the worker receives directly or indirectly, in respect of his employment, from his employer.

Equal pay without discrimination based on sex means:

(a) that pay for the same work at piece rates shall be calculated on the basis of the same unit of measurement;

(b) that pay for work at time rates shall be the same for the same job. [...]

(2) Secondary law

- 38 After several directives starting in 1975 the actual secondary legislative framework is defined by Directive 2006/54. In Chapter 1 ('Equal pay') of Title II Article 4 provides:

Article 4 - Prohibition of discrimination

For the same work or for work to which equal value is attributed, direct and indirect discrimination on grounds of sex with regard to all aspects and conditions of remuneration shall be eliminated.

In particular, where a job classification system is used for determining pay, it shall be based on the same criteria for both men and women and so drawn up as to exclude any discrimination on grounds of sex.

Concerning the Horizontal Provisions in Title III, Chapter 1 on 'Remedies and enforcement' is of particular importance.

- 39 At least in one specific sector the Capital Requirements Directive \(2013/36/EU\)³² secondary legislation addresses directly the female (under-)representation:

[Recital] 60. [...] To facilitate independent opinions and critical challenge, management bodies of institutions should therefore be sufficiently diverse as regards age, gender, geographical provenance and educational and professional background to present a variety of views and experiences. Gender balance is of particular importance to ensure adequate representation of population. In particular, institutions not meeting a threshold for representation of the underrepresented gender should take appropriate action as a matter of priority. [...] Therefore, diversity should be one of the criteria for the composition of management bodies [...]

Article 88

[...] 2.(a) [...] Furthermore, the nomination committee shall decide on a target for the representation of the underrepresented gender in the management body and prepare a policy on how to increase the number of the underrepresented gender in the management body in order to meet that target. [...]

Article 91 [...]

10. Member States or competent authorities shall require institutions and their respective nomination committees to engage a broad set of qualities and competences when recruiting members to the management body and for that purpose to put in place a policy promoting diversity on the management body.

b) General interpretation

- 40 One of the longest-standing human rights issues the CJEU is dealing with is the principle of equal pay and later the principle of equality between men and women. It has developed an

(1) EU Institutions

41 In aiming at giving social rights a new impetus the Commission has adopted a Recommendation on 'The European Pillar of Social Rights' (April 2017). Its Principle No. 2 refers to:

Gender equality

a. Equality of treatment and opportunities between women and men must be ensured and fostered in all areas, including regarding participation in the labour market, terms and conditions of employment and career progression.

b. Women and men have the right to equal pay for work of equal value.

42 In a more specific Recommendation on strengthening the principle of equal pay between men and women through transparency (2014)³⁴ the Commission had stated the respective principles.

43 In a Communication (2013)³⁵ on the application of Directive 2006/54 the Commission concluded:

Although estimates vary as to how much of the total gender pay gap arises from pay discrimination as prohibited by Article 157 TFEU and Article 4 of the Directive, it appears to be consensual that a considerable part of it can be traced back to discriminatory practices.

44 The European Parliament (EP) has a long-standing tradition to call for effective implementation of the principle of equality between men and women. Specifically, on the issue of equal pay the EP adopted a Resolution (2012)³⁶ with recommendations to the Commission on application of the principle of equal pay for male and female workers for equal work or work of equal value. Most recently, it has adopted Resolution (2017)³⁷ on women's economic empowerment in the private and public sectors in the EU.

46 Without being exhaustive and besides the Fundamental Rights Agency of the EU (FRA) which generally deals with human rights issues, the importance the EU attributes to the question of equality between men and women is shown by the creation of the specific body called European Institute of Gender Equality (EIGE). Although created as a network of national equality institutions the Equinet contributes to the promotion of equality at EU level.³⁸

(a) Gender pay gap

- 47 Specialised bodies or organisations also deal with these problems and try to contribute to overcome them. Recently, Equinet has published a report 'A comparative analysis of gender equality law in Europe 2016' summarizing the situation i.a. as follows:

Unfortunately, despite this legal framework, the difference between the remuneration of male and female employees remains one of the great concerns in the area of gender equality: on average, women in the EU earn 16.3 % less than men, and progress has been slow in closing the gender pay gap. The differences can be partly explained by factors other than discrimination: e.g. traditions in the career choices of men and women; the fact that men, more often than women, are given overtime duties, with corresponding higher rates of pay; the gender imbalance in the sharing of family responsibilities; glass ceilings; part-time work, which is often highly feminised; job segregation etc. However, another part of the discrepancies cannot be explained except by the fact that there is pay discrimination, which the principle of equal pay aims to eradicate.

- 48 In the Conclusions of its 2017 Report on equality between women and men in the EU Equinet states:

Over the last years, the gaps in pay, employment and working hours have been plateauing. At this rate of change, it will take more than a century to close the overall gender gap in earnings.

(b) (Under-)representation in decision-making bodies within private companies

- 49 The organisation European Women on Boards (EWoB) has published a report on Gender Diversity on European Boards (Realizing Europe's Potential: Progress and Challenges, April 2016)³⁹ containing i.a. statistics as well as legal and other frameworks.

52 This statistic shows that for all countries concerned by the complaints for which information is available the minimum Gender pay gap still lies above 5.5 %. That means that for all countries the principle of equal pay for work of equal value is not ensured. This is even more true taking into account the lack of clarity in relation to the calculation (e.g. to which extent did they - or at least should they - imply other discriminatory elements like career differences leading to the increase of the pay gap) or in relation to the data basis (e.g. undocumented work or informal economy, both sectors in which the gender pay gap will most probably be even higher).

2. Concerning the (under-)representation in decision-making positions within private companies

53 In its updated 'Data table' the European Institute for Gender Equality (EIGE) provides the following information:⁴²

54 This statistic illustrates that only two countries achieve the Commission's proposed objective (40%, see above, para. 45). However, this data only refers to 'largest listed companies' thus leaving out the quantitatively much more important part of the other 'listed companies' as well as non-listed companies. Therefore, it is to be assumed that all countries concerned do not reach this threshold.

C. Legal Principles

55 This section is aimed at setting the framework for Part II by analysing the fundamental legal questions which are at the core of this case.

1. General considerations

56 The two main elements raised in the complaint differ very much from a legal point of view. Whereas the first (equal pay) is very 'classic' in the sense of a long-standing tradition of States providing for (general) legislation in this respect but not sufficiently enforcing it the second problem is a fairly new element which is only slowly appearing at international and national level as a problem to be seriously dealt with.

57 Against this background being different in character both elements are governed by Article 20 of the Charter, 'The right to equal opportunities and equal treatment in matters of employment and occupation without discrimination on the grounds of sex'.⁴⁴ From the outset, it should therefore be noted that this Article belongs to the most relevant provisions as it is a so-called 'hard core' Article (see Article A§1(b) of the Charter). More generally, the Council of Europe attributes great importance to Gender equality.

2. Gender pay gap

a) General considerations

58 In general terms, the principle of equal pay for work of equal value is of fundamental character. It is directly related to the human dignity of women who fail to be recognised as equal when it comes to their remuneration.⁴⁵ They are prevented from taking part in the normal societal life at the same footing as men.

59 The Gender pay gap is one longest-standing element of equality between men and women in employment. According to the CEACR: 'Pay differentials remain one of the most persistent forms of inequality between women and men' and can be considered as 'one of the most obvious examples of structural gender discrimination (see above para. 20 (para. 668)).

⁴⁴ Or Article 1 of the 1988 Protocol; see for the most recent commentary on this provision C. Kollonay Lehoczky, Article 20, in: N. Bruun, K. Lörcher, I. Schömann, S. Clauwaert (eds.), The European Social Charter and the Employment Relation, Hart Publishing Oxford, 2017, 358 - 380.

⁴⁵ See the reference to human dignity in relation to remuneration in Article 23(4) UDHR.

60 Legally speaking, it found recognition in international human rights and employment law starting in 1948 by Article 23(2) UDHR (see above A.1.a)) and continued to be transferred to a legally binding international instrument for the first time by ILO Convention No. 100 in 1951 (see above A.2.a). This fundamental rights Convention also formed the basis of Article 4§3 of the Charter.

61 However, despite of all international and national legal and other measures, the principle of equal pay has not at all been (fully) applied. Quite to the contrary, in describing the future developments two documents might be quoted, first the ILO assessing the situation at the global level as something like a three generation problem (75 years):

Even where gender pay differences are narrowing, they are doing so extremely slowly: at the current rate it is estimated that another 75 years will be needed to bridge the gap (see above para. 20 (para. 669))

whereas Equinet - mainly concerning the EU level - sees a nearly four generation problem (100 years):

Over the last years, the gaps in pay, employment and working hours have been plateauing. At this rate of change, it will take more than a century to close the overall gender gap in earnings. (see above para. 48) for attaining equal pay if nothing fundamentally different happens earlier.

62 Besides this tremendous challenge as such there is a further duplicating dimension. As old-age pensions are normally based on the contributions paid during the working life and these contributions are calculated in relation to the remuneration received the discriminating gender pay gap has an enormously important negative impact on the amount of the old-age pensions,⁴⁶ in short: the lower wages lead to lower amounts of old-age pensions. Thus, the gender pay gap extends the discrimination of women even over the retiring age. This is dramatic because many women (even having worked for a long time) will run the great risk of poverty as elderly persons.

63 At least from the point of view of the ETUC this situation requires a much stricter approach to assess the situation of (non-)conformity in both substantive and procedural dimensions.

b) Substantive requirements

64 At the substantive level, there is a quantitative and a qualitative dimension. The former is related to the statistical (evaluation of the) situation. In assessing the (non-)conformity of the situation in respondent States it would appear that the Committee only attributed a decisive importance if there was 'manifestly' high (unadjusted) gender pay gap.⁴⁷ However, from the point of view of the ETUC it would be necessary to change this approach.

⁴⁶ See, for example, the EU Council conclusions 'Equal income opportunities for women and men: Closing the gender gap in pensions' (04.06.2015).

⁴⁷ See, for example, Conclusions 2014 - Azerbaijan - Article 4§3: 'The Committee notes from the report that in 2009 the average wages of women amounted to 58,6% of that of men and 46,2% of that of men in 2012. The Committee notes the downward trend in wage equality and considers that the unadjusted pay gap is manifestly too high and therefore, finds that the situation is not in conformity with the Charter.'

- 65 Starting by the fundamental word 'equal', continuing with the great importance of this right (see above in particular para. 58 but also paras. 13, 15, 17 and 21) and taking into account the necessity that the rights recognised in the Social Charter must take a practical and effective, rather than purely theoretical, form.⁴⁸
- 66 According to the point of view of the ETUC, a different approach is required. This would mean that only a 'zero' difference is permitted. However, admitting even that 'equal' might not be interpreted in the strict sense it should nevertheless be evaluated at the threshold close to 'zero'. A reasonable threshold would therefore appear to permit only a difference of 5%.
- 67 According to relevant statistics (see above B.1) all countries concerned by the complaints for which information is available the minimum Gender pay gap still lies above 5.5 %. That means that for all countries concerned the principle of equal pay for work of equal value is not ensured.
- 68 In qualitative terms, the Committee has established certain requirements. As it obvious from the statistics referred to above (see above B.1) the timeline shows the persistent nature of the Gender pay gap. Against this background, it is not any more sufficient to say that the respondent States are (totally) free in their means how to ensure equal pay. In drafting a list of measures particular attention is paid to the Conclusions of the Committee. However, sometimes it appears necessary to go further by particular taking into account international case law. Accordingly, it would appear important to require a clear and comprehensive legislation (see above para. 21 (para. 732). In also taking into account also the international case law (see above A.) this legislation should at least ensure that
- the coverage of all workers (in a wide definition) is ensured (taking in particular into account that there is no limitation to the 'great majority' like in Article I§2 e.g. for Article 2),
 - the general legal concept includes also indirect discrimination (see above para. 21 (in particular para. 745),
 - the term 'pay' contains all elements of remuneration as well as supplementary pensions,
 - the comparison comprises as a minimum
 - transparency (see, for example, above para. 42) or at the very least an effective prohibition of any requirement of confidentiality imposed by employers on potential victims of discrimination or referred to as requirement in any impartial procedure aimed at examining potential discrimination in relation to remuneration,
 - the reach of comparison between jobs performed by women and men being construed as wide as possible (see above para. 20 (para. 698),
 - the wide definition of 'equal value' also encompassing work that is of an entirely different nature, which is nevertheless of equal value (see above para. 20 (para. 673); 'completely different', see above para. 15 (para. 11)),
 - the necessity to evaluate the respective job by a 'job evaluation' with criteria excluding any kind of (also indirect) discrimination (see, for example, above 15 (paras. 12 and 13), para. 17 (para. 2), para. 20 (para. 701)), ⁴⁸ Decision on the merits, 09.09.1999 - No. 1/1998 - International Commission of Jurists v. Portugal, para. 32.

- the respective assessment followed by effective consequences in case that the result shows a discrimination.

c) Procedural requirements

69 Procedural requirements are aimed at additionally serving to ensure the effective exercise of the right to equal pay. Besides the substantive criteria mentioned above it is necessary to ensure them by legislation. However, it is not sufficient to enact legislation. In particular, a review of legislation is necessary if the threshold is not attained (see, for example para. 13). This would mean that a country which has not attained the threshold required and has not reviewed existing legislation in a given period of time (at least within a period of five years (see above B.1)) should be considered as violating Article 20 of the Charter,

70 Legislation must be applied effectively. The following elements are necessary to ensure this application. At a general level,

- the labour inspection must have the task of monitoring and possibly intervening coupled by the respective powers and the appropriate equipment in financial and personal terms,
- trade unions as well as human rights institutions or organisations must have the right to file (general) complaints (and be admitted as third parties in any individual complaints (see below).

71 At an individual level, the women concerned must have the right to effective access to court complemented by a fair and effective procedure including i.a. the shift of burden of proof to the employer. Moreover, any discrimination (victimisation) in relation of taking any procedural action must be effectively prevented.

72 In any event, it appears important that any possible shift from substantive to procedural requirements should not be continued. Conversely, both elements should be evaluated on their own merits (thus leading possibly to two violations).

d) Interim conclusions

73 This catalogue of measures appears necessary in order take a new, fresh an comprehensive step to achieve the elimination of the Gender pay gap at least to considerably shorten the enormous periods of time mentioned above (see para. 61). If they are not implemented the Committee should find a violation of Article 20 of the Charter.

74 This is particularly the case in relation to the substantive requirement of the 5 % threshold mentioned above (see para. 66). As all countries concerned do not attain this threshold the Committee should come to finding a violation already for this reason.

3. (Under-)representation in decision-making bodies within private companies

a) General considerations

75 As previously described, the problem of equal representation in decision-making bodies in private companies has only recently appeared at the stage of international and European level (see para. 56). In terms of the Charter and according to the Decision of admissibility, it relates to Article 20 of the Charter RESC. Until now and in substance, the Committee has only timidly dealt with this question (see above para. 30).

- 76 That is why it appears necessary to interpret Article 20 according to the principles which have been referred to previously. As a starting point it might be helpful to understand that a position as member in a board is of course crucial for your general career in working life.
- 77 The wording of Article 20 of the Charter might be considered as not very clear in this respect. Two main questions might have to be addressed: Are the fields referred to in lit. a) – d) of exclusive character? In the affirmative: Does any of the fields enumerated in lit. a) – d) encompass the collective character of decision-making positions in general and decision-making bodies in particular?
- 78 Concerning the first question the wording as such does not exclude a non-exhaustive character because it does not contain any specific wording to this effect (such as 'only' or 'exclusively'). Nevertheless, one could base an exclusive understanding on a comparison with other provisions which contain specific wording as the exemplary character (e.g. 'such as'). In such as case it would be necessary to answer the second question.
- 79 To answer the second question the notion of 'positions' and 'bodies' has to be clarified. First, decision-making 'positions' could be understood as the more general term than the respective 'bodies'. As the former are closely related to an individual situation (such as promotion) this situation would fall under lit. d) ('career development, including promotion'). However, if 'bodies' was something separate, the situation might be more complicated. (If a member of a 'body' is chosen internally, there is no problem to consider this also as a 'promotion' because of their possibly different character.) In any event, it could be also considered as 'terms of employment' understood as being also meant in a collective dimension.
- 80 Examining the context as well as the objective of Article 20 of the Charter, based in particular on the wide formulation in Part I as well as in particular the introductory part of Article 20 ('effective exercise ...') there should be no doubt that these elements strive for including this issue in the said provision.
- 81 Taking into account also an emerging trend in national legislation complemented by recent international case law of CEDAW (see above para. 18) and first elements in EU legislation (see above para. 39) this trend should be considered as confirming such an interpretation. Concerning the developments in international law, mainly elaborated by the CEDAW, tend to go in a more collective dimension. In particular Articles 2 and 3 CEDAW read together with Article 11 CEDAW can be interpreted to cover a general obligation for the Contracting Parties to take effective measures in order to achieve equality regarding the female representation on boards in private companies.
- 82 Concluding this examination, the ETUC is of the view that the Committee should come to the conclusion that the (under-)representation of women in decision-making bodies is covered by Article 20 of the Charter.

b) Substantive requirements

- 83 In substantive terms, it would appear necessary to provide for a threshold which should be attained in order to secure equal representation in decision-making positions. If one would, however, not require an 'equal' representation (and thus oblige States to ensure 50% representation of both sexes) it would nevertheless appear important to define a threshold close to this percentage (for example 40%).

c) Procedural requirements

84 In principle, and mutatis mutandis the same elements as described above (2.c) should apply here also.

d) Interim conclusions

85 Article 20 of the Charter should be understood as covering (under-)representation of women in decision-making bodies within private companies. This would of course apply all the more to State-owned enterprises or respective bodies in public administrations. In examining the question of (non-conformity the Committee should come to the conclusion to require a threshold to be attained which is close to or least not distant from 50%. It should require also respective legislation and all necessary procedural measures which are necessary to achieve this objective.

86 If one would take the basis of 40% and if one would further base the assessment in particular on the relevant statistics (see above B.2) it would appear that the States concerned do not sufficiently ensure the application of Article 20 of the Charter.

II. Specific situation

87 In the foundation of the 'General framework' (described in Part I) this Part II will provide the country-specific international case law (see below A)⁴⁹ as well as any further pertinent material (see below B) and thus form the basis for the legal assessment (see below C).

88 To recall, the main content of the complaint against Czech Republic is described in the Decision on admissibility of 4 July 2017⁵⁰ as follows:

UWE invokes the following grounds:

a) The first concerns the wage gap between men and women in the Czech Republic, which still persists and is unfavorable to women. According to UWE, unequal pay is a reality, despite the international obligations entered into and the national legislation enacted. In this respect, UWE also alleges that, in practice, the bodies which are responsible for monitoring effective compliance with employment law in relation to equal pay for men and women, have failed to fulfill their task, thus rendering existing legislation ineffective. UWE cites the work in particular of the Ombudsman and the labour inspectorate;

b) Secondly, UWE alleges that a very small number of women occupy decision-making positions within private companies, as national legislation does not have any specific provisions ensuring equality.

⁴⁹ As already indicated in paragraph 6 of Part I, the extracts of case law of international bodies highlighted below refer in principle to the latest recommendations/observations/concerns expressed by those bodies on the respondent country unless mentioned or considered relevant otherwise.

⁵⁰ Decision on admissibility, 4 July 2017.

A. International case-law

1. United Nations

89 The situation in the Czech Republic has been examined in relation to the obligations deriving from two relevant instruments as follows:

a) International Covenant on Civil, Political and Cultural Rights

90 In considering the third periodic report of Czech Republic, the Human Rights Committee (CCPR) adopted the following concluding observations:⁵¹

C. Principal matters of concern and recommendations

5. While noting the information provided by the State party in relation to the extended mandate of the Public Defender of Rights, now also officially empowered to act as a national preventive mechanism for the purposes of the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture, the Committee is concerned that this institution has not been established as a consolidated national institution with broad competence in the field of human rights, in accordance with the Paris Principles (General Assembly resolution 48/134) (art. 2). The State party should either provide the Public Defender of Rights with a consolidated mandate to more fully promote and protect all human rights, or achieve that aim by other means, with a view to establishing a national human rights institution with a broad human rights mandate and providing it with adequate financial and human resources, in line with the Paris Principles (General Assembly resolution 48/134, annex).

7. The Committee recalls its previous concluding observations (CCPR/C/CZE/CO/2, para. 11) and notes with concern that women continue to be underrepresented in decision-making positions in the public sector, particularly in Government ministries, parliament, regional councils and among governors. The Committee regrets that patriarchal stereotyped attitudes still prevail with respect to the position of women in society (arts. 2, 3, 25 and 26). The State party should adopt concrete measures to increase the representation of women in decision-making positions in the public sector, and, where necessary, through appropriate temporary special measures to give effect to the provisions of the Covenant. It should also take steps to address the difficulties identified with regard to women's access to key positions in the hierarchies of political parties, as mentioned in paragraph 22 of the State party's third periodic report. The State party should take the necessary practical steps, including awareness-raising campaigns, to eradicate stereotypes regarding the position of women in society.

b) International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

91 Examining the second periodic report of the Czech Republic, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (CESCR) come to the following 'Concluding Observations':⁵²

C. Principal subjects of concern and recommendations

National human rights institution

7. The Committee is concerned that the State party does not have a national human rights institution that fully complies with the principles relating to the status of national human rights institutions (the Paris Principles) (art. 2, para. 1). The Committee recommends that the State party expedite the revision of the mandate and powers of the Ombudsperson, as contained in ⁵¹ Adopted at its 3003rd meeting, held on 24 July 2013. See also http://tbinternet.ohchr.org/_layouts/treatybodyexternal/Download.aspx?symbolno=CCPR%2fC%2fCZE%2fCO%2f3&Lang=en.

⁵² Adopted, at its 40th meeting (E/C.12/2014/SR.40), held on 23 May 2014, see also http://tbinternet.ohchr.org/_layouts/treatybodyexternal/Download.aspx?symbolno=E%2fC.12%2fCZE%2fCO%2f2&Lang=en.

Law 349/1999 Coll. of 8th December 1999 and subsequent amendments, with a view to bring them into line with the Paris Principles (General Assembly resolution 48/134, annex). It also recommends that the State party ensure that the Ombudsperson has competence over matters relating to economic, social and cultural rights. Moreover, the Committee recommends that the State party take steps to seek accreditation of the office of the Ombudsperson from the International Coordinating Committee of National Institutions for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights.

Non-discrimination

8. The Committee notes with concern that, while the Charter on Fundamental Rights and Freedoms prohibits discrimination on a broad range of grounds, the implementing law, the Anti-Discrimination Act 198/2009 Coll. of 23 April 2008, is more restrictive. The Committee is also concerned about the low number of cases of discrimination reported, which may be a consequence of this discrepancy (art. 2, para. 2). The Committee recommends that the State party amend the Anti-Discrimination Act with a view to:

(a) Expanding the grounds of discrimination explicitly prohibited by the Act, in line with article 2, paragraph 2, of the Covenant, and taking into account the Committee's general comment No. 20 (2009) on non-discrimination in economic, social and cultural rights;

(b) Incorporating the Covenant rights not currently covered by the Anti-Discrimination Act, such as the right to strike or the right to enjoy the benefits of scientific progress and its applications;

(c) Providing for other remedies to victims of discrimination, such as administrative remedies, which are accessible, affordable, timely and effective.

The Committee also recommends that the State party increase public awareness of the prohibition of discrimination and of avenues of redress.

Gender pay gap

11. The Committee is concerned at the gender pay gap in the State party owing to the vertical and horizontal gender segregation in the labour market and women's over-representation in part-time employment, despite women's achievements in higher education and the implementation of policy of equality of men and women. The Committee is also concerned that the State party has not implemented temporary special measures to accelerate women's representation in the field of employment, despite the fact that such measures are provided for in the State party's legislation (art. 3). The Committee recommends that the State party:

(a) Take proactive measures to provide men and women with equal career opportunities by promoting the pursuit of education and training in fields that are traditionally dominated by one sex or the other;

(b) Conduct a survey and classification of work considered as being of equal value;

(c) Carry out awareness-raising campaigns to change society's perception of gender roles and facilitate women's re-entry into the labour market after career breaks;

(e) Implement temporary special measures to increase women's representation in decision-making positions in the public sector.

The Committee refers the State party to its general comment No. 16 (2005) on the equal right of men and women to the enjoyment of all economic, social and cultural rights.

c) Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women

92 In its 'Concluding observations' on the sixth report periodic report concerning the Czech Republic the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) has expressed the following concerns and recommendations:⁵³

⁵³ Considered at its 1385th and 1386th meetings, on 23 February. See also http://tbinternet.ohchr.org/_layouts/treatybodyexternal/Download.aspx?symbolno=CEDAW%2fC%2fCZE%2fCO%2f6&Lang=en.

C. Principal areas of concern and recommendations

Access to justice

10. The Committee reiterates its previous concern regarding the low number of gender discrimination lawsuits filed and the fact that women often prefer out-of-court settlements owing to, inter alia, the financial cost of litigation and the difficulty of substantiating incidents of gender discrimination.

11. *The Committee recommends that the State party expeditiously establish a comprehensive system of free legal aid for women without sufficient means to pay for legal assistance in anti-discrimination proceedings, taking into account the Committee's general recommendation No. 33 (2015) on women's access to justice. The Committee also recommends that the State party consider undertaking legislative reforms to allow for actio popularis, including in cases of gender discrimination. The Committee reiterates its previous recommendation that the State party provide systematic training on the application of legislation prohibiting discrimination on grounds of sex in line with its obligations under the Convention, including the Anti-Discrimination Act, the Labour Code and the Employment Act, to judges, lawyers, labour inspectors, non-governmental organizations and employers.*

National machinery for the advancement of women

12. The Committee is concerned that the frequent changes in the reporting lines and mandates of the State party's national machinery for the advancement of women have resulted in instability and weakened capacity for the implementation of the Convention. It also remains concerned about the inadequate human and financial resources of the Gender Equality Unit, with a significant proportion of the funding coming from the European Social Fund and Norwegian funds rather than specifically earmarked funding from the State party's regular budget.

13. Recalling its general recommendation No. 6 (1988) on effective national machinery and publicity and the guidance provided in the Beijing Platform for Action, in particular regarding the conditions necessary for the effective functioning of national mechanisms, the Committee calls upon the State party to establish a clear, stable and sustainable framework for the efficient functioning of its national machinery for the advancement of women. The framework should include a clear mandate and reporting lines, the necessary authority, adequate human and financial resources and a monitoring and evaluation capacity for its Gender Equality Unit. The State party should also allocate specifically earmarked regular budget funding for its national machinery.

Temporary special measures

14. The Committee notes that the Anti-Discrimination Act (2009) does not explicitly cover political participation and that a plan of action for the implementation of the recently adopted strategy for equality of women and men for the period from 2014 to 2020 (the "+1 Strategy") is currently being developed. It notes with regret that the State party did not adopt the draft law on temporary special measures requiring a minimum quota for the representation of women on electoral lists of political parties. The Committee is concerned at the lack of specific goals, targets and time frames in the +1 Strategy to accelerate the achievement of substantive equality of women, including Roma women, in political and public life, especially in legislative assemblies, public and private companies, the Government and the public administration, in particular at the senior levels.

15. The Committee reiterates its recommendation that the State party strengthen the use of temporary special measures, in accordance with article 4 (1) of the Convention and the Committee's general recommendation No. 25 (2004) on the subject, in all areas under the Convention in which women are underrepresented or disadvantaged. It recommends that the State party develop specific goals, targets and time frames for the implementation of the +1 Strategy on equality of women and men and that it consider amending the Anti-Discrimination Act and other relevant legislation to include temporary special measures to accelerate the achievement of substantive equality of women and men in political and public life. The Committee also recommends that the State party raise awareness among parliamentarians, government officials, employers and the general public about the necessity and time-bound nature of temporary special measures.

Participation in political and public life

22. The Committee notes the high rate of female representation in the judiciary of the State party, but is concerned:

(b) That women, in particular Roma women, continue to be significantly underrepresented at all levels of decision-making, including in both chambers of Parliament, regional and local assemblies, the Government, especially at the ministerial and vice-ministerial levels, in mayoral and ambassadorial posts and in senior positions in the foreign service, as well as in senior positions in companies owned or controlled by the State party.

23. The Committee reiterates its previous recommendation (see CEDAW/C/CZE/CO/5, para. 27) that the State party take effective measures, including temporary special measures, in accordance with article 4 (1) of the Convention and the Committee's general recommendation No. 25. In that regard, the State party should:

(b) Set specific goals, targets and time frames to increase the representation of women, including Roma women, in legislative assemblies, the Government and the public administration, in particular at the senior levels, and include such special measures in the internal rules and regulations of each government department;

(c) Provide incentives for decision makers who comply, as well as adequate sanctions for those who fail to comply, with such measures or quotas;

(d) Establish a transparent and independent system for monitoring and reporting on the level of representation of women in political and public life.

Employment

26. The Committee is concerned about the slow progress made during the reporting period. It notes the reduction in the very wide gender pay gap in the State party, but remains concerned about:

(a) The low employment rate of women, horizontal and vertical segregation in the labour market, the concentration of women in traditionally female-dominated professions and in the informal sector, and their underrepresentation in managerial and decision-making positions;

(b) The continued gender wage gap of approximately 21 per cent;

(c) The limited capacity of central and regional labour inspectorates to combat gender discrimination, in particular against women facing intersecting forms of discrimination, such as Roma women and refugee and migrant women, notwithstanding the recent appointment of 16 labour inspectors;

(d) The fact that, notwithstanding a recent increase, the minimum wage remains low and falls below the poverty line for single mothers with children.

27. The Committee recommends that the State party strengthen its measures to ensure substantive equality of women and men in the labour market. In particular, it recommends that the State party:

(b) Continue to reduce the gender pay gap, with a view to eliminating it, including by expeditiously implementing its envisaged online "pay calculator" and ensuring that it is based on a data-collection system that regularly gathers independently verifiable data on gender and salaries that are cross-comparable and transparent; provide a clear legal definition of the principle of equal work for equal pay; and ensure effective mechanisms for timely redress and compensation for violations of that principle;

(c) Further strengthen its labour inspectorates to enable them to combat discriminatory practices and empower them to enforce commensurate sanctions against perpetrators of such practices;

(d) Consider raising the minimum wage with a view to addressing its negative impact on the feminization of poverty.

2. International Labour Organisation

93 The CEACR has made the following statements concerning the Czech Republic in relation to the following Conventions:

a) Convention No. 100

Direct Request (2017)⁵⁴

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Gender remuneration gap and measures to address such gap. The Committee notes from the Government's report that in 2014, the average wage of women still represented 78.4 per cent of men's (78.5 per cent in 2013). The Committee welcomes the strong commitment from the Government to address effectively the gender remuneration gap through the set of measures and actions in the Strategy for Equality of Women and Men for 2014–20 and the project entitled "Equality of Women and Men at the Labour Market focusing on (In)Equal Remuneration of Women and Men – 22% to full EQUALITY" to be implemented between 2016 and 2020 in cooperation with the European Social Fund. In addition, to the numerous initiatives and measures planned to ensure in general gender equality on the labour market, including measures to address vertical and horizontal segregation between men and women, the Committee notes the following specific measures: the organization of an information campaign on the gender pay gap and stereotypes; an in-depth analysis of the pay differentials, including identification of their underlying causes; the promotion of tools to identify such inequalities, such as the LOGIB-CZ self-test tool; training for labour officials, labour inspectors and employers; an analysis of legal possibilities to provide incentives to employers applying gender equality in practice; a national media awareness-raising campaign; the elaboration of proposals, including legislative provisions, aimed at increasing transparency in wages as well as a strategic action plan to reduce pay differentials between men and women. The Government also indicates that one of the indicators in the Strategy for Equality of Women and Men is to reduce the difference in remuneration of men and women to the average difference in the European Union (around 12 per cent). The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the legal and practical measures taken, within the framework of the Strategy for Equality of Women and Men 2014-2020 and the 22% to full EQUALITY project or otherwise, to reduce the gender remuneration gap, the obstacles encountered and the results achieved.

Scope of comparison. For a number of years, the Committee has been pointing out that the Labour Code limits the application of the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value to workers employed by the same employer (section 110(1)). The Government indicates in its report that the introduction of the obligation for employers of more than 50 employees to publish information regarding the average remuneration in individual comparable categories of employees and job positions according to gender is part of the priorities in implementing equality for women and men for 2015. In this respect, the Committee notes the observations from the Confederation of Industry attached to the Government's report, indicating that although employers are interested in closing the pay gap, they do not support such legislative proposal. The Committee considers that more transparency in information regarding wages would help workers to identify inequalities and contribute to implementing the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. However, the Committee notes that the Government continues to consider that the application of the principle to workers with different employers is not possible in practice. The Government also reiterates that there are significant differences in the standard of living between the different regions of the country and that this is reflected in the different wage rates applied on the basis of the principle of supply and demand. The Committee would like to point out once again that the Convention does not require the abolition of differences in the general wage level between various regions, sectors or even enterprises, where such differences apply equally to men and women. The Committee recalls that to address effectively the differences in men's and women's wages, the reach of comparison between jobs performed by women and men should be as wide as possible, in the context of the level at which wage policies, systems and structures are coordinated. Where women are more heavily concentrated in certain sectors or occupations, there is a risk that the possibilities for comparison at the enterprise or establishment level will be insufficient if the application of the principle is limited to the same employer. Legislation should not exclude the possibility of bringing equal pay claims where no comparator is available within the enterprise, particularly in cases where enterprises predominantly employ women. The Committee asks once again the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations, to examine at its earliest convenience the possibility to enable the comparison of jobs beyond the same employer, particularly where there is no appropriate comparator available in the enterprise, in order to implement fully the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the action taken with respect to the proposal to publish information on wages.

Application of the principle in the public sector. The Committee notes from the Government's report the adoption of Act No. 234/2014 on Civil Service, which governs in its Part IX the remuneration of civil servants, including basic characteristics of salary scales, and Government Regulation No. 305/2015 on salaries of civil servants establishing salary scales. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Act does not include any provisions prohibiting discrimination between men and women but it provides that where the details of the remuneration of civil servants are not governed by the Act they are regulated by the general provisions of the Labour Code and therefore indirectly by the Anti-Discrimination Act to which the Labour Code refers. The Committee asks the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure that the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value is applied in practice to the public service and how male and female civil servants can avail themselves of their right to equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. Recalling that, in the public sector, pay differentials between men and women may come from the post classification and therefore the salary scales applicable – work mainly performed by women is often undervalued – the Committee asks the Government to indicate the methodology used to ensure that salary scales were established free from gender bias and took into consideration the principle of the Convention.

Enforcement. Labour inspection. The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that a pilot project on the supervision of the performance of labour inspectors in the area of equal remuneration for men and women was to be implemented from March to May 2016 in some regional inspectorates. The results of this pilot project will be used as a basis for the elaboration of a specific methodological instruction on this issue. The Committee also welcomes the Government's indication that of 144 labour inspectors, 16 inspectors are specialized in equal treatment at the workplace and are regularly trained through seminars and meetings. The Committee notes, however, that the Government continues to provide statistics that do not concern specifically violations of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, but rather violations in the field of discrimination or of the right to equal treatment in general. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the results of the pilot project on equal remuneration and the methodology developed on the basis thereof. It also asks the Government to provide information on any violations concerning specifically the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value detected by, or brought to the attention of, the labour inspectors as well as cases dealt with by the Public Defender of Rights, indicating the nature of the case, any sanctions imposed and the remedies provided. The Committee once again asks the Government to take the necessary measures to promote public awareness of the legal provisions on equal remuneration between men and women for work of equal value and the procedures and remedies available where there has been a violation thereof, and to assist complainants in such procedures.

Observation (2017)⁵⁵

Enforcement. Labour inspection. Equality body.

[...] The Committee further notes from the Public Defender's report for 2015, that most of the complaints received concern discrimination in the field of labour and employment (108 out of 379 in 2015). In a comprehensive study entitled "Discrimination in the Czech Republic: Victims of discrimination and obstacles hindering their access to justice” published in 2015, the Public Defender of Rights issues 15 recommendations for a more effective enforcement of the Anti-Discrimination Law of 2009, on the basis of a survey which identified obstacles encountered by victims of discrimination (belief that it is difficult to enforce one's rights, fear of retaliation, lack of knowledge of the relevant bodies and procedures, burden of proof in judicial proceedings, low fines, etc.). Such recommendations include the organization of targeted promotional and awareness-raising campaigns for the public and “vulnerable groups”, training of judges, lawyers, inspectors, social workers, medical staff and police officers, amendment of legislation (reduction of court fees in discrimination cases, free legal aid, etc.) and the design of effective, deterring and reasonable penalties. The Committee notes that, in its observations, the CMKOS alleges that assistance by the State to victims of discrimination is insufficient. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any action taken further to the recommendations of the Public Defender of Rights and any legal or practical measures taken to strengthen the enforcement of the anti-discrimination legislation. To ensure legal clarity and certainty regarding legislative non-discrimination provisions, the Committee further requests the Government to ensure the broad dissemination of the material designed by the labour inspectorate and the Public Defender of Rights to foster awareness of legal provisions and relevant procedures to obtain redress among workers, employers and their organizations, as well as labour inspectors, judges and other public officials dealing with non-discrimination and equality in employment and occupation. The Committee also request the Government to continue to provide information on the number and nature of any administrative or judicial decisions applying and interpreting the legal provisions on discrimination in the field of employment and occupation, including the remedies provided and the sanctions imposed.

Direct Request (2016)⁵⁶

Equality of opportunity of men and women in employment and occupation [...]

With respect to public service employment, the Committee notes that within the framework of the Updated Measures for Priorities and Policies of the Government in Promoting Equal Opportunities for Women and Men adopted in 2011, all ministries have to promote actively equal representation of men and women in management positions and adopt specific measures when the representation of men or women in such positions is less than 30 per cent. Noting the new initiatives taken or envisaged by the Government, the Committee requests the Government to provide information, including statistics, on the results achieved by the measures taken to help women return to the labour market after a career break, and provide information on any measures taken, in cooperation with workers' and employers' organizations, to promote equal opportunities for men and women with respect to access to a wider range of jobs, including any measures aimed at addressing gender stereotypes regarding women's professional aspirations, preferences and capabilities and the roles of men and women in the society. The Committee also requests the Government to provide specific information on the results achieved in the ministries regarding the access of women to management positions, including to decision-making positions, and to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to promote equal opportunities of men and women in the public sector. Please provide statistical information on the situation of men and women in employment, by economic sector and professional category.

3. Council of Europe

94 In examining the situation in the Czech Republic, the ECSR has come to the following ‘Conclusions’:

a) Article 4§3

Conclusions XX-3

Legal basis of equal pay

According to the report, the principle of equal remuneration is included in the Labour Code. It is declared as one of the fundamental principles of labour law relations, where the obligation is imposed on the employer to adhere to the principles of fair remuneration as well as to the principles of equal wage, salary and other monetary benefits. According to Sections 109 and 110 of the Labour Code, all employees of a given employer are entitled to equal wage, salary or remuneration for equal work or work of equal value. Equal work or work of equal value means the work of equal or comparable complexity, responsibility and strenuousness performed under equal or comparable working conditions and with equal or comparable work efficiency and attained work results.

Guarantees of enforcement and judicial safeguards

According to the report, employees who consider themselves to be discriminated against in their pay may apply to labour inspection bodies or may exercise their rights in courts of law. The burden of proof is shifted in discrimination cases. An Ombudsman provides assistance to victims of discrimination when they apply for the initiation of proceedings on grounds of discrimination.

The Committee recalls that legislation must provide effective protection against any retaliatory measures taken by the employer against a worker asking to benefit from the right to equal pay. The latter requirement includes in particular an obligation to prohibit dismissal in such cases and to provide for the reinstatement of the workers in cases of unlawful dismissal. In exceptional cases, where reinstatement is not possible or is not desired by the worker, financial compensation instead may be acceptable, but only if it is sufficient to deter the employer and to compensate the worker.

The Committee asks what rules apply in this regard.

Methods of comparison and other measures

In its Conclusions XIX-1 (2012) on Article 1 of the Additional Protocol the Committee held that the situation was not in conformity with the Charter as in equal pay litigation the legislation only permitted pay comparisons between employees working for the same company or undertaking. In connection to this, the Committee referred to its Statement of Interpretation in the General Introduction to Conclusions XIX-1.

The report states that the principle of equal pay comparisons outside the company cannot be achieved in practice for a number of reasons. Firstly employers cannot have the possibility of finding the information on the particular earnings of other employees. Secondly, the required observance of the principle of equal pay for equal work or work of equal value across different employers would deny the basic economic laws by encouraging the labour force movement to the higher paid locations. Thirdly, enforcing the principle of equal pay for equal work in regions with different socio-economic conditions and different levels of the cost of living would increase the real wage of an employee in a region with lower cost of living.

The Committee notes that the report requests more clarifications regarding the meaning and application of the principle of pay comparisons.

In its Statement of Interpretation (2012) on Article 20 (Article 1 of the Additional Protocol) the Committee held that equal treatment between women and men includes the issue of equal pay for work of equal value. Usually, pay comparisons are made between persons within the same undertaking/company. However, there may be situations where, in order to be meaningful this comparison can only be made across companies/undertakings. Therefore, the Committee requires that it be possible to make pay comparisons across companies.

The Committee considers that that at the very least, legislation should require pay comparisons across companies in one or more of the following situations:

- cases in which statutory rules apply to the working and pay conditions in more than one company;
- cases in which several companies are covered by a collective works agreement or regulations governing the terms and conditions of employment
- cases in which the terms and conditions of employment are laid down centrally for more than one company within a holding (company) or conglomerate.

The Committee holds that this interpretation applies, mutatis mutandis to Article 4§3.

The Committee considers in this respect that the approach of EU law allows for a proper implementation of Article 4§3.

Article 4§3 requires that in equal pay litigation cases the legislation should allow pay comparisons across companies only where the differences in pay can be attributed to a single source. For example, the Committee has considered that the situation in the Netherlands complied with this principle, because in equal pay cases in the Netherlands comparison can be made with a typical worker (someone in a comparable job) in another company, provided the differences in pay can be attributed to a single source (Conclusions 2012, Netherlands).

In this connection, the Committee has referred to the judgment of the European Court of Justice of 17 September 2002 on the A.G. Lawrence and Others v. Regent office Care Ltd (case C 320/00) where the Court held that there is nothing in the wording of Article 141(1) EC to suggest that the applicability of the provision of equal pay is limited to situations in which men and women work for the same employer. However, where the differences identified in the pay conditions of workers performing equal work or work of equal value cannot be attributed to a single source, there is no body which is responsible for the inequality and which could restore equal treatment. Therefore such a situation does not come within the scope of Article 141(1) EC, and the work and the pay of those workers cannot be compared on the basis of that provision.

The Committee asked whether pay comparisons outside the company are possible in equal pay litigation cases, when the difference identified in the pay conditions of female and male workers performing work of equal value is attributable to a single source. This could signify employees working for the same legal person or group of legal persons, employees of several undertakings or establishments covered by the same collective works agreement or regulations. In such cases, regulation of the terms and conditions of employment actually applied is traceable to one source, whether it be the legislature, the parties to a collective work agreement or the management of a corporate group (Opinion of Advocate General Geelhoed of 14 March 2002 regarding the ECJ Case C-320/00).

The Committee notes from the supplementary information provided by the Government that the equal pay comparison is guaranteed only at the level of one employer. The observance of the principle of equal pay for equal work or work of equal value across different employers in different socio-economic conditions and regions would seriously affect the elementary function of the wage, which is closely linked to the cost of living in the respective locality or region.

The Committee further considers that the pay gap may indeed be due to different levels of regional development as well as the differences in economic performance of companies, or to other similar reasons. However, these reasons should not preclude the workers from trying their equal pay case by comparing their pay with that of another worker performing the work of equal value in another company, based on the criteria outlined above.

The Committee asks the next report to provide information in the light of these clarifications.

The Committee notes from the report that in 2012, at all education levels the average earning of women amounted to CZK 22,683 and that of men to CZK 28,916. According to Eurostat, the gender pay gap in unadjusted form stood at 22% in 2012.

Conclusion

Pending receipt of the information requested, the Committee defers its conclusion.

B. Further pertinent material on the situation in law and practice

1. Concerning the Gender pay gap

- 95 From different sources, including all the conclusions and/or observations of the above-mentioned bodies, the main regulatory instruments in relation to discrimination on the grounds of sex in general and equal pay for equal work in particular -and without being exhaustive- the following:

- Act on Equal Treatment and Legal Means of Protection against Discrimination (“Anti-discrimination Act”; n° 108/2009) of 2009 (subsequently amended),
- Labour Code of 2006 (Act No. 262/2006) (in particular sections 109 and 110)
- The Employment Act (No. 435/2004),
- Act No. 234/2014 on Civil Service, which governs in its Part IX the remuneration of civil servants, including basic characteristics of salary scales,
- Government Regulation No. 305/2015 on salaries of civil servants establishing salary scales.

96 However, despite this existing regulatory framework, (recent) statistics show that there still exists a gender wage gap in the Czech Republic:

- According to the Commission, based on Eurostat 2014 figures, in Czech Republic the gender pay gap stands at 22.5%⁵⁷ (the average gender pay gap in the EU is 16.7%) and the gender overall earnings gap in the Czech Republic stands at 40.5% (the average gender overall earnings gap in the EU is 39.8%).⁵⁸

2. Concerning the (under-)representation in decision-making positions within private companies

97 There exists no regulatory framework on representation of women in decision-making positions in private enterprises.

98 In April 2016, the average share of women on the boards of the largest publicly listed companies registered in the EU-28 Member States reached 23.3 %. For Czech Republic, the figure is only 8.8%.⁵⁹

C. Application of the legal principles

99 In Part I the relevant ‘International law and material’ as well as ‘Further pertinent material’ has been described in detail. On this basis, the (legal) ‘Principles’ which govern the framework for the assessment of this complaint have been developed. Against this background, the ETUC assesses situation in the Czech Republic as follows.

100 From the outset, it is noted that the ECSR has not found a violation in its Conclusions concerning the relevant Articles but, nevertheless, asked certain questions (as quoted above). However, this situation does not exclude that - after a more detailed examination - the ECSR might come to a different assessment. In the view of the ETUC this would be necessary.

1. Concerning the Gender pay gap

101 In general terms, it is clear that the Gender pay gap remains above 0%. This is the case for decades. This situation is not at all compatible with the principle of equal pay for work of equal value, even less so when taking into account the requirement of 'effectiveness' enshrined in the introductory words of the relevant articles.

⁵⁷ According to the Eurostat figures for 2015, this remained at 22.5%. (See also table in Part I.B.1)

⁵⁸ European Commission factsheet gender way gap 2016 – Czech Republic ; http://ec.europa.eu/justice/gender-equality/files/gender_pay_gap/2016/gpg_country_factsheet_cz_2016_en.pdf

102 More specifically and according to the ECSR's case law, the Gender pay gap has both, a substantial and procedural dimension. This is confirmed by the international law approaches as developed in particular by the CESC, CEDAW and CEACR (see quotations in Part I). Not fulfilling one of the requirements in respect of these two dimensions leads to a violation.

a) Substance

103 From a substantive perspective, there are at least the following elements which should (at least in combination) lead to a violation of Article 20 ESC:

- Statistical evidence (see above para. 96) shows that there is still a gender pay gap. Even if it might have been reduced during the last time any Gender pay gap does not fulfil the non-discrimination requirement based on sex.
- The official statistics are still excluding small (micro) seized enterprises. It is therefore most probable that the Gender pay gap is even higher in these enterprises.

104 From the point of view of the ETUC this illustrates that there is a violation of Article 20 of the Charter from the substantive perspective.

b) Procedure

105 Moreover, from a procedural perspective, it appears evident that there is also a violation as the result of eliminating the gender pay gap is not achieved. In particular, it is obvious that the general framework for the supervision of the satisfactory application of the principle of equal pay is insufficient:

- in principle, the labour inspectorate should (be able to) ensure the satisfactory application of this important principle; despite the fact that the respondent State has ratified ILO Convention No. 81 on labour inspection it is obvious that this is not the case (in particular taking into account the nearly total lack of supervision in the SMEs);
- all other means to ensure the satisfactory application of the principle of equal value haven proven insufficient.

106 From the point of view of the ETUC this illustrates that there is a violation of Article 20 of the Charter also from the procedural perspective.

2. Concerning the (under-)representation in decision-making positions within private companies

107 Concerning the (under-)representation in decision-making positions within private companies this problem has only been addressed in more recent years. As developed in Part I.B.2. this is covered by Article 20 of the Charter. If there is not sufficiently clear and wide-ranging legislation and/or if the practice shows that this equality principle is not implemented sufficiently this leads from the point of view of the ETUC to finding a violation of Article 20 of the Charter.

a) Substance

108 Statistical evidence (see above para. 98) shows that there is still an under-representation of women in decision-making bodies within private companies. Even if there might be relevant legislation and even if the degree of representation of women would have increased it is not to be disputed that women are not sufficiently represented within these bodies.

109 From the point of view of the ETUC this illustrates that there is a violation of Article 20 of the Charter from the substantive perspective.

b) Procedure

110 It would appear that there are no effective legislative measures in order to ensure the sufficient representation of women in decisions-making bodies within private enterprises. In practice, there is even less supervision and enforcement.

111 From the point of view of the ETUC this illustrates that there is a violation of Article 20 of the Charter also from the procedural perspective.

III. Conclusions

A. Substantive conclusions

112 This collective complaint - as all the other 14 complaints concerning the same issues - is of great importance for the full realisation of the very fundamental right of women to non-discrimination. In particular, the continuous denial of equal pay for work of equal value is one of the fundamental problems which still remain in European societies.

113 From the ETUC's point of view it is necessary to come to the following conclusions of a violation of Article 20 of the Charter in relation to

- the Gender pay gap in its substantive (see above II.C.1.a)) and procedural dimensions (see above II.C.1.b)) as well as in relation to
- the under-representation of women in decision-making bodies also in its substantive (see above II.C.2.a)) and procedural (see above II.C.2.b)) dimensions.

114 The Committee might thereby also in particular consider to take account of the recommendations/observations/concerns expressed by the international bodies referred to in II.A. addressed to the respondent state.

B. Procedural request

115 Given the high complexity of this case, in particular in relation to possible justifications which might be provided during the further procedure by Governments or others, there will most probably be specific issues which are not yet dealt with in these ETUC Observations.

116 Accordingly, and referring to the example in the case of MATICA v. Croatia, the ETUC would be very grateful if it were granted the opportunity to submit additional information following in particular the observations by the Government concerned but also any other relevant observations in this respect.
