Part I : The activities of the European Court of Human Rights

We invite you to read the INFORMATION NOTE No. 124 (provisional version) on the court's case-law. This information note, compiled by the Registry's Case-Law Information and Publications Division, contains summaries of cases which the Section registrars and the Head of the aforementioned Division examined in November 2009 and selected as being of particular interest.

A. Judgments

1. Judgments deemed of particular interest to NHRSs

The judgments presented under this heading are the ones for which a separate press release is issued by the Registry of the Court as well as other judgments considered relevant for the work of the NHRSs. They correspond also to the themes addressed in the Peer-to-Peer Workshops. The judgments are thematically grouped. The information, except for the comments drafted by the NHRS Unit, is based on the press releases of the Registry of the Court.

Some judgments are only available in French.

Please note that the Chamber judgments referred to hereunder become final in the circumstances set out in Article 44 § 2 of the Convention: "a) when the parties declare that they will not request that the case be referred to the Grand Chamber; or b) three months after the date of the judgment, if reference of the case to the Grand Chamber has not been requested; or c) when the panel of the Grand Chamber rejects the request to refer under Article 43".

Note on the Importance Level:

According to the explanation available on the Court's website, the following importance levels are given by the Court:

1 = High importance, Judgments which the Court considers make a significant contribution to the development, clarification or modification of its case-law, either generally or in relation to a particular State.

2 = Medium importance, Judgments which do not make a significant contribution to the case-law but nevertheless do not merely apply existing case-law.

3 = Low importance, Judgments with little legal interest - those applying existing case-law, friendly settlements and striking out judgments (unless these have any particular point of interest).

Each judgment presented in section 1 and 2 is accompanied by the indication of the importance level.

- Grand Chamber judgment

Kart v. Turkey (no. 8917/05) (Importance 1) – 3 December 2009 – No violation of Article 6 § 1 – The failure to lift the applicant's Parliamentary immunity did not impair his right of access to a court to a degree disproportionate to the legitimate aim pursued

In the Parliamentary elections of 3 November 2002, Mr Kart, a member of the CHP (the People's Republican Party), was elected to the Turkish Parliament. Prior to his election, he practised as a lawyer, and during the course of his professional activities two sets of criminal proceedings were brought against him, one for insulting a lawyer and the other for insulting a public official. As an MP he enjoyed Parliamentary immunity, and the criminal proceedings against him were suspended under Article 83 of the Turkish Constitution, which stipulates that an MP who is alleged to have committed an offence before or after election shall not be arrested, questioned, detained or tried unless the National Assembly decides to lift his immunity. Two requests for the applicant's immunity to be lifted were transmitted to the competent Parliamentary authorities, who decided to suspend the criminal proceedings for the duration of the applicant's term of Parliamentary office. Mr Kart challenged that decision before the Plenary Assembly of the Turkish Parliament, relying on his right to be judged in a fair trial. The files concerning the applicant's requests to have his immunity lifted remained on the Plenary Assembly's agenda for over two years, until the next Parliamentary elections, without ever being examined.

Mr Kart was re-elected in the 2007 general elections. In 2008 the Speaker of the National Assembly informed him that the files concerning the lifting of his immunity were still pending.

Mr Kart complained that he had been deprived of his right to a fair trial, with the resulting restrictions on the rights of the defence, in that he had been deprived of the opportunity to clear his name.

The application was lodged with the European Court of Human Rights in February 2005. It was declared partly admissible in January 2008, after a public hearing. In July 2008 the Court delivered a judgment finding by four votes to three that there had been a violation of Article 6 § 1. In December 2008 a panel of the Grand Chamber acceded to the Turkish Government's request to have the case referred to the Grand Chamber in accordance with Article 43 of the Convention. On 3 December 2009 the Court pronounced the present judgment in a public hearing.

Preliminary remarks

It was not for the Court to rule in an abstract manner on the scope of the protection that States accorded their MPs, but to ascertain in this particular case how Mr Kart's Parliamentary immunity had affected his right of access to a court. This was the first time the Court had examined a case where it was the beneficiary of Parliamentary immunity who complained that his immunity was preventing him from being tried.

Article 6 § 1

The Court underlined that Parliamentary immunity pursued the legitimate aim of guaranteeing the smooth functioning of Parliament and protecting its integrity and independence. It noted that although the immunity enjoyed by Turkish MPs appeared to be broader than in other States, the scope of the protection afforded had limits and could not be deemed excessive per se. The procedure for examining requests to lift Parliamentary immunity in Turkey was regulated by the Constitution and the Rules of Procedure of the National Assembly. Mr Kart complained that the decision-making procedure in question lacked clarity; the Court pointed out that decisions concerning the implementation of Parliamentary liability were political decisions by nature, so they could not be expected to satisfy the same criteria of clarity as court decisions.

As to the decisions taken in Mr Kart's case, the Court noted that the applicant had had the possibility to file an objection to the decisions to suspend the criminal proceedings against him. The refusal to lift his Parliamentary immunity could not be considered discriminatory or arbitrary as similar requests, both from members of the Parliamentary majority and from opposition members had also been refused.

Criminal proceedings were still pending against Mr Kart and there was no denying that the uncertainty inherent in any criminal proceedings had been accentuated in this case by the impugned Parliamentary procedure, as the delays it had caused had resulted in equivalent delays in the determination of the criminal proceedings against him. However, in standing for election in two successive Parliamentary elections the applicant, who was a lawyer, had been aware that he was aspiring to a status that could well delay those proceedings. The Court stressed that the effect of the Parliamentary decisions concerning Mr Kart's immunity had merely been to suspend the course of justice, without influencing it or taking part in it. The damage Mr Kart complained that the criminal proceedings against him had done to his reputation was inherent in any official accusation, but there was no doubt in the Court's mind that the applicant's honour had been protected by respect for the presumption of innocence. The failure to lift Mr Kart's immunity had merely constituted a temporary procedural obstacle to the determination of the criminal proceedings, but had not deprived him of the possibility of having his case tried on the merits. It had not been disproportionate to the legitimate aim pursued by the authorities, which was to protect the Parliamentary institution. The Court held by thirteen votes to four that there had been no violation of Article 6 § 1.

Judge Malinverni expressed a concurring opinion, Judge Bonello, joined by Judges Zupančič and Gyulumyan, expressed a dissenting opinion, and Judge Power expressed a dissenting opinion. These opinions are annexed to the judgment.

- Right to life

G.N. and Others v. Italy (no. 43134/05) (Importance 1) – 1 December 2009 – No violation of Article 2 (substantive) – No failure to protect the lives of Mrs D.C. and the other applicants' relatives on account of the Italian authorities' unawareness of the risk of transmission of HIV of Hepatitis C at the material time – Violation of Article 2 (procedural) – Domestic authorities' failure to provide the applicants with adequate and prompt response – Violation of Article 14 in conjunction with Article 2 – Discriminatory treatment on account of the possibility to benefit from out-of-court settlements being given to haemophiliacs only, and not to persons with a hereditary disorder as was the case for Mrs D.C. and the other applicants' relatives

The six applicants are the relatives of persons now deceased who contracted human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) or hepatitis C in the 1980s following blood transfusions carried out by the State health service. The seventh applicant, Mrs D.C., is the only surviving member of the infected group. The persons concerned had thalassaemia, a hereditary disorder whose sufferers need to be given blood and blood products in order to survive.

In 1993 a group of about a hundred persons commenced proceedings (the so-called "Emo uno" case) against the Ministry of Health ("the Ministry"), seeking compensation for damage sustained in similar cases. On various dates the applicants intervened in those proceedings. Following an appeal against the first-instance judgment, the Ministry was ordered to provide compensation only in respect of cases having occurred after certain key dates in terms of the understanding of the viruses. As the seventh applicant and the other applicants' relatives had been infected before those dates, they did not obtain compensation. The Court of Cassation upheld that decision in 2005, taking the view that before hepatitis C and HIV had been identified by the global scientific community no causal link had existed between the Ministry's conduct and the damage sustained.

A November 2003 decree enabled the Ministry to conclude out-of-court settlements with haemophiliacs infected in this manner. Because they suffered from thalassaemia, the applicants were unable to benefit. All the persons involved in the "Emo uno" case, with the exception of the applicants and ten others, settled out of court. Two other groups of persons infected in the same circumstances brought actions for damages against the Ministry. These cases, known as "Emo bis" and "Emo ter", are still pending. In these proceedings the courts did not follow the guidelines established in "Emo uno" with regard to the starting dates from which the Ministry's responsibility was engaged vis-à-vis infected persons.

The applicants complained that the authorities had not carried out the necessary checks in order to prevent infection. They also complained of the shortcomings in the subsequent conduct of the civil proceedings and of the refusal to award them compensation. They complained of the suffering endured as a result of their infection or that of their relative and of the length of the domestic proceedings. Lastly, they alleged that they had been discriminated against compared to other groups of infected persons.

The Court noted that it had not been established that at the material time the Ministry had known or should have known about the risk of transmission of HIV or hepatitis C via blood transfusion, and the Court could not determine from what dates onward the Ministry of Health had been or should have been aware of the risk, nor could the assessment of the Ministry's responsibility by the domestic courts in the "Emo uno" case be regarded as arbitrary or unreasonable. The Italian authorities could not be said to have failed in their duty to protect the life of Mrs D.C. and the other applicants' relatives. The Court therefore held that there had been no violation of Article 2 on this point.

The Court observed that while the Italian system, by offering the applicants the possibility of a civil remedy, had in theory satisfied the procedural requirements of Article 2, in practice the proceedings in question had lasted for periods ranging from three and a half years to over ten years depending on the applicant, despite the fact that exceptional diligence was called for in compensation proceedings brought by persons infected following blood transfusions. While the Court accepted that the proceedings had been complex, it observed that there had been delays and periods of inactivity, and noted that the subsequent proceedings before the Court of Cassation had lasted for three years and ten months. Lastly, the remedy provided by the "Pinto Act" in order to complain of the excessive length of proceedings would not have been suitable in the applicants' case. The Court considered that the authorities had not provided them with an adequate and prompt response and held that there had been a violation of Article 2 in this respect.

Article 14

The Court examined the applicants' complaint concerning discriminatory treatment under Article 14 in conjunction with Article 2. With regard to the alleged discrimination against the applicants in relation to the infected persons who had brought the "Emo bis" and "Emo ter" proceedings, the Court considered that the difference between the findings of the Italian courts in these two cases and in the "Emo uno" case stemmed from a change in the case-law and did not provide sufficient basis for concluding that the first set of proceedings had been arbitrary and had given rise to discriminatory treatment. This part of the complaint was therefore rejected as being manifestly ill-founded.

As to the discrimination claimed by the applicants as thalassaemia sufferers or their heirs in relation to the haemophiliacs who had benefited from out-of-court settlements, the Court observed that there had been a difference in treatment between persons in similar situations. The distinction had been based on the type of hereditary disorder from which Mrs D.C. and the other applicants' relatives suffered and on the fact that, under the law, the Italian Government could only conclude out-of-court settlements with haemophiliacs. The Court considered that the applicants had been subjected to discriminatory treatment and ruled that there had been a violation of Article 14 taken in conjunction with Article 2.

The Court declared the complaints under Article 3 and 8, inadmissible as being manifestly ill-founded and did not consider it necessary at this stage to examine the complaint concerning the length of the proceedings in the "Emo uno" case, under Article 6 § 1.

Velcea and Mazăre v. Romania (no. 64301/01) (Importance 1) – 1 December 2009 – Violation of Article 2 (procedural) – Domestic authorities' failure to conduct a speedy and effective investigation into the deaths of the applicants' relatives – Violation of Article 8 – Domestic courts' strict interpretation of the provision of the Civil Code on causes of unworthiness to inherit had gone beyond what was necessary to ensure adherence to the principle of legal certainty

The applicants are the father and sister of Tatiana A. In 1993 Tatiana and her mother were killed during a fight that had started between Tatiana and her husband, Aurel A. On the night of the incident Aurel A.'s brother, George L., an off-duty police officer, had been with him. George L. had then left with his brother and taken him home. Shortly afterwards Aurel A. committed suicide, leaving two letters in which he confessed to having killed his wife and mother-in-law. George L., acting in his capacity as a police officer, reported the incident to the police. The criminal investigation in respect of Aurel A. was discontinued by the Bucharest County Court on the ground that the perpetrator of the crimes had died and no one else had been involved. Following a criminal complaint lodged by the first applicant against George L., the Bucharest military prosecutor's office opened an investigation, which was discontinued in December 1994. On an appeal by the applicants, the Military General Prosecutor's Office of the Supreme Court of Justice decided to continue with the prosecution and the investigation was resumed. In April 2003, following legislative amendments concerning the status of police officers, the case was referred to the prosecution service at the Bucharest County Court, which discontinued it in March 2004. The applicants were not notified of those decisions.

Proceedings for the division of Tatiana's estate were commenced in 1993. The first applicant sought to have Aurel A.'s family disqualified from inheriting on the ground that his daughter had been killed by Aurel A. The Romanian Civil Code (Article 655 § 1 at the material time) provided that a person convicted of murdering the deceased was unworthy to inherit under the latter's estate. Applying a strict interpretation of that provision, the Romanian courts refused to declare Aurel A. unworthy of inheriting because he had not been convicted of murder by a final court decision as he had committed suicide.

The applicants complained that the national authorities had not undertaken a speedy and effective investigation with a view to identifying and punishing those responsible for the events of 1993. The main subject of their complaint was the judicial proceedings against George L. They also complained of the refusal of the courts to rule that Aurel A. was unworthy to inherit, which had had the effect of allowing Aurel A.'s family to inherit under Tatiana's estate. The application was lodged with the Court on 11 April 2000 by Mr Velcea and on 12 April 2002 by Mrs Mazăre.

Alleged violation of Article 2

The Court reiterated that where an individual had been killed as a result of the use of force, an effective official investigation had to automatically be carried out both properly and speedily. There also had to be a sufficient element of public scrutiny of the investigation or its results.

In this case an investigation had indeed been carried out on the initiative of the authorities. However, although they had been informed of George L.'s involvement in the incident it had not been until several months later and after the applicants had lodged a formal criminal complaint that the authorities had opened an investigation in his regard. Regarding whether the investigation had been adequate, the Court pointed out, among other things that as George L. had been a police officer and the investigation in his regard should have been carried out by independent officers. The independence of the military prosecutors who had carried out the investigation had been questionable given the national rules in force at the time according to which military prosecutors and police officers belonged to the same military structure, in accordance with the principle of hierarchical subordination. The role played by the prosecution service at the Bucharest County Court, which had merely discontinued the proceedings without undertaking any investigative measure, had not sufficed to offset the lack of independence of the military prosecutors. It was also clear that the investigation – which lasted 11 years – into George L.'s involvement had not been conducted with the requisite speed.

Lastly, while acknowledging that the applicants had in some respects been kept involved in the proceedings, the Court found that they had not been duly informed of the orders of December 1994 and March 2004 discontinuing the proceedings, which might have prevented them from challenging those decisions effectively.

The Court held, unanimously, that the measures taken in respect of George L.'s involvement in the incident in 1993 had not amounted to a speedy and effective investigation and that Article 2 had been violated.

Alleged violation of Article 8

Inheritance rights were a feature of family life that could not be disregarded. The Convention did not require member States to enact legislative provisions in the area of worthiness to inherit, but where such provisions existed, as was the case under Romanian law, they had to be applied in a manner compatible with their aim.

In the present case there was no doubt that Aurel A. had killed Tatiana. The Court could not call into question the fundamental principle of domestic criminal law according to which criminal responsibility was personal and non-transferable. It found, however, that from a civil-law angle it was unacceptable that following a person's death (Aurel A. here) the unlawfulness of his acts should remain without effect. In the specific circumstances of this case, by applying the provision of the Civil Code on causes of unworthiness mechanically and too restrictively, the Romanian courts had gone beyond what was necessary to ensure adherence to the principle of legal certainty. The Court held, unanimously, that there had been a violation of Article 8.

- Conditions of detention / Ill-treatment

Jeronovičs v. Latvia (no. 547/02) (Importance 2) – 1 December 2009 – Violation of Article 3 – Degrading treatment during transfers between prisons – Violation of Article 6 § 1 – Infringement of the right to a fair trial on account of the applicant's inability to attend a Supreme Court hearing

The applicant is currently in Šķirotava Prison in Riga. In 2000 he was sentenced to nine years' imprisonment for armed robbery with violence. He appealed on points of law against that judgment in December 2001 and the appeal was set down for hearing in January 2002. Mr Jeronovičs was given notice of the date and time of the hearing on 9 January 2002. The following day he asked the prison authorities to arrange for his transfer to the Supreme Court so that he could attend the hearing. No action was taken. The applicant was transferred several times between Grīva Prison and Daugavpils Prison, situated in the same city. Before departure and on arrival he was placed in an isolation cell. In the cell in Grīva Prison, where he was held in April 2005, the applicant claimed to have had to sleep on a bunk without a mattress and without access to daylight. On his arrival at Daugavpils Prison, and before his departure, he was placed in a room measuring 1.5 sq. m, without windows or sanitary facilities. When he arrived he spent five hours there without sleeping owing to the cramped conditions and before his departure in May 2005 he remained there for over eight hours with two fellow prisoners. In June 2005 Mr Jeronovičs lodged a criminal complaint with the Chief Public Prosecutor's Office concerning his conditions of detention. The complaint was rejected on the ground that the transfer procedure had complied with the rules.

Mr Jeronovičs was again placed in an isolation cell in October 2005 with a view to his transfer to the Regional Court some 90 kilometres away, having been informed that his appeal – in the context of the proceedings he had brought to contest the prison board's refusal to place him under a more favourable prison regime – was due to be examined there. He remained in isolation for 17 hours without eating, having refused to take his meal sitting on the ground. On arrival at the Regional Court the following day he was once more placed in isolation. By the time the hearing began he had spent 27 hours without eating or sleeping. The Regional Court dismissed the applicant's appeal. In November 2005 he wrote to the Ministry of Justice complaining of his ill-treatment at the hands of the prison authorities. He received a reply suggesting that he apply in writing to the public prosecutor's office.

The applicant complained that the prison authorities had prevented him from appearing at the Supreme Court hearing in his case. He also complained of the conditions in which he had been held during his numerous transfers.

Article 6 § 1

The applicant had not at any point waived his right to appear before the Supreme Court and had expressly requested the prison authorities, five days before the hearing, to arrange for his transfer. The Government spoke of a "last-minute" request; the Court, however, could discern no lack of diligence on the part of Mr Jeronovičs, who had been prevented from appearing, without a lawyer being able to submit observations on his behalf. There had therefore been a breach of his right to a fair trial under Article 6 § 1.

Article 3

While the conditions of detention in Grīva Prison had been disputed between the parties, with regard to Daugavpils Prison it had not been disputed that on arrival and before departure the applicant had been locked in an extremely cramped cell (approximately 1.5 sq. m) without windows or sanitary facilities, first for five hours without sleeping and then for eight hours.

In October 2005, while awaiting transfer to the Regional Court, Mr Jeronovičs had again spent around 17 hours in isolation in Daugavpils Prison without being able to sleep or eat, before being transferred to the temporary isolation cell pending the hearing. The Government had not disputed either the description of the conditions there or the applicant's assertion that he had been deprived of food and sleep for 27 hours continuously.

The Court considered that, although they had lasted for a relatively short time, the conditions thus described had been objectively apt to undermine Mr Jeronovičs' dignity. The threshold of severity which characterised treatment contrary to Article 3 had been exceeded, even if the authorities had not intended to humiliate the applicant.

- Risk of being subjected to ill-treatment / Deportation cases

Daoudi v. France (no. 19576/08) (Importance 1) – 3 December 2009 – Violation of Article 3 if deportation order were implemented – Deportation to Algeria of a man convicted of terrorist acts would amount to a real risk of exposure to inhuman or degrading treatment

The applicant is currently subject to a compulsory residence order in the Creuse department. He arrived in France in 1979 with his parents and acquired French nationality by naturalisation in 2001. Between 1999 and 2001 he allegedly developed close contacts with radical Islamist groups and, among other things, admitted having attended a paramilitary training course in Afghanistan in 2001.

In September 2001 the applicant was arrested during an operation to dismantle a radical Islamist group affiliated to al-Qaeda and suspected of having prepared a suicide attack on the United States Embassy in Paris. On 2 October 2001 he was charged with conspiring to prepare an act of terrorism and with using a forged passport. In May 2002 he was stripped of his French nationality. In March 2005 the Paris Tribunal de Grande Instance found him guilty as charged, sentenced him to nine years' imprisonment and ordered his permanent exclusion from French territory. In December 2005 the Paris Court of Appeal upheld the judgment, but reduced the sentence to six years' imprisonment.

In April 2008 the applicant lodged an application to have the order permanently excluding him from French territory set aside. On the date of his release, he was taken to an administrative detention centre and immediately applied for asylum, lodged an application for judicial review of the administrative decision stipulating Algeria as the country to which he was to be deported and requested suspension of the deportation order. On the same day Mr Daoudi lodged a request with the Court under Rule 39 of the Rules of Court (interim measures). The Court indicated to the French Government that it would be advisable not to deport the applicant to Algeria pending the proceedings before the Court. Four days later he was made the subject of a compulsory residence order in the Creuse department. The applicant's applications and appeals were subsequently dismissed. Accordingly, in April 2008 the Paris Administrative Court decided that it was no longer necessary to decide the application for suspension of the deportation order following the application of Rule 39 of the Rules of Court. In June 2008 the French Office for the Protection of Refugees and Stateless Persons (OFPRA) dismissed the application for asylum. In November 2008 the Paris Court of Appeal dismissed the application for the order excluding him from French territory to be lifted. Lastly, in July 2009, the National Court of Asylum (CNDA) ruled on an appeal by the applicant against the decision refusing him asylum. It held that, in view of the nature and extent of his involvement in radical Islamist movements it was reasonable to believe that, given the interest which the Algerian Security Services might take in him, the applicant could be subjected to inhuman or degrading treatment on his arrival in Algeria. However, under the relevant domestic and international provisions, no protection was given to persons who gave serious cause for belief that they were guilty of acts contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations – which was the case with regard to the applicant. An appeal on points of law against that decision is pending before the Conseil d'Etat.

The applicant alleged that implementation of the order deporting him to Algeria would expose him to a risk of inhuman or degrading treatment prohibited by Article 3. He also alleged that as he had come to France when he was five years old and had no ties with Algeria, his deportation would be a disproportionate interference with his right to respect for his private and family life guaranteed by Article 8. The application was lodged with the Court in April 2008.

The Court, aware of the danger posed to the community by terrorism and, accordingly, of the importance of the stakes involved in the fight against terrorism, considered that it was legitimate for States to show great firmness in dealing with those who took part in acts of terrorism, which it could not condone in any circumstances. Having regard to the absolute prohibition of torture and of inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, the Court nonetheless had to assess the risk incurred by Mr Daoudi of exposure to such treatment if he were to be deported to Algeria.

The Court noted first of all that it was a known fact that the Algerian authorities knew of the applicant's identity and of the serious crimes of which he had been convicted. Admittedly, there was nothing to suggest that he was or could be the subject of criminal proceedings in Algeria for the offences at the origin of this case, but that was not decisive here. It was clear from many corroborative, reliable and recent sources (including reports of the United Nations Committee against Torture, a number of non-governmental organisations, the US Department of State and the UK Ministry of the Interior) that in Algeria persons involved in terrorist acts were arrested and detained by the Department for Information and Security (DRS) unpredictably and without a clearly established legal basis essentially for the purposes of being interrogated or obtaining information, and not with a purely judicial aim. According to those sources, such persons placed in detention without review by the judicial authorities and without any communication with the outside (lawyer, doctor or family), could be subjected to ill-treatment, including torture. The Government had not produced evidence to refute those assertions and, furthermore, the National Court of Asylum had also considered it reasonable to believe that, given the interest which the Algerian security services might take in him, Mr Daoudi might, on his arrival in Algeria, be subjected to inhuman or degrading treatment.

For those reasons, and having regard in particular to the applicant's background, who was not only suspected of having links with terrorism, but had been convicted of serious crimes in France of which the Algerian authorities were aware, the Court was of the opinion that it was likely that were he to be deported to Algeria the applicant would become a target for the DRS. It held, unanimously, that the decision to deport Mr Daoudi to Algeria would amount to a violation of Article 3 if it were implemented.

Alleged violation of Article 8

Having regard to its finding that the applicant's deportation to Algeria would amount to a violation of Article 3 and having no reason to doubt that the French Government would comply with the present judgment, the Court did not consider it necessary to settle the hypothetical question whether, if deported, the applicant's right to respect for his private and family life would be violated.

Dolenec v. Croatia (no. 25282/06) (Importance 2) – 26 November 2009 – No violation of Article 3 (substantive) – Lack of sufficient information to conclude as to the existence of ill-treatment on account of the general conditions of the applicant's detention – Violation of Article 3 (procedural) – Lack of an effective investigation into the alleged ill-treatment by prison personnel (incident of 18 September 2006 and incident of 21 January 2007) – No violation of Article 8 – The applicant's psychiatric condition was adequately addressed by the relevant prison authorities – Violation of Article 6 §§ 1 and 3 – Failure to provide the applicant with access to his case file

The applicant's case notably concerned his complaint about his conditions of detention in various prisons and the alleged lack of adequate medical care for his psychiatric condition, post-traumatic stress disorder. He also alleged that he had been assaulted by prison guards and that there had been no effective and thorough investigation into his allegation. He also complained that the proceedings against him had been unfair. The Court concluded that due to the lack of clear medical findings proving the alleged ill-treatment and the applicant's treatment under regular and adequate psychiatric supervision there has not been violation of Articles 3 and 8. But it concluded that there had been a violation of Article 3 on account of the lack of an effective investigation in respect of alleged ill-treatment. Regarding the applicant's inability to engage the services to prepare his defence, the Court found a violation of Article 6 §§ 1 and 3.

Tabesh v. Greece (no. 8256/07) (Importance 2) – 26 November 2009 – Violation of Article 3 – Conditions of detention pending the deportation – Violation of Article 5 § 1 f) – Unlawful detention – Violation of Article 5 § 4 – Lack of an effective remedy

The applicant is an Afghan national. In December 2006, he was arrested and convicted for being in possession of fake identity documents and later that month he was placed in detention for the purpose of deportation to Afghanistan. The applicant complained about the conditions of his detention pending deportation and alleged that his placement in detention had been unlawful, since the reasoning of the administrative and judicial decisions had been insufficient in this connection, and that when arrested, he was informed of the reasons for his arrest in a language that he did not understand. The Court found that there had been a violation of Article 3 on account of the poor conditions of the applicant's detention for the purpose of deportation. It held also that there had been a violation of Article 5 §§ 1 and 4, due to the applicant's unlawful detention and the lack of an effective remedy to challenge that detention.

- Right to liberty and security / Administrative detention

Shannon v. Latvia (no. 32214/03) (Importance 2) – 24 November 2009 – No violation of Article 5 § 1 c) – Sufficient grounds to justify a sex offender's pre-trial detention – No violation of Article 5 § 4 – No failure attributable to the national authorities in the delay of reviewing three of the decisions on the lawfulness of the applicant's detention – Domestic courts' abstract reasoning in decisions to extend the applicant's detention were justified by the particular circumstances of the case – Violation of Article 5 § 4 – Failure to speedily review two of the decisions on the lawfulness of the applicant's detention

The applicant, Mr Shannon, citizen of the United States of America, is currently thought to be living in the United States of America. Temporarily staying in Latvia, Mr Shannon was arrested and taken into custody in October 2002 on suspicion of having sexually assaulted juveniles during a previous trip to Latvia. The suspicion against him was based on statements by four victims and testimony from an unnamed eyewitness. He was officially charged with sexual assault in October 2002.

His subsequent detention on remand was prolonged by two levels of jurisdiction on five occasions (October 2002, November 2002, January, March and May 2003). All of his appeals against the detention orders were refused on the basis of the reasonableness of the suspicion against him, the severity of the crime with which he was charged, the fact that he had no legal and/or fixed residence in Latvia, the danger of him absconding, and that he could impede the investigation. In June 2003, the prosecutor also accused the applicant of having molested young boys during other trips to Latvia in July, August and September 2001. The charges were extended from sexual assault to aggravated, forcible sexual assault, forcible sodomy and inducing juveniles to take part in prostitution and/or production of pornography.

Mr Shannon was convicted as charged in January 2004 and sentenced to five years' imprisonment; he was subsequently acquitted of the child pornography charges and his sentence reduced to four years. Released on parole in July 2006 after having served three quarters of his sentence, Mr Shannon was expelled from Latvia three days later.

Mr Shannon complained that his detention on remand during the proceedings against him had been unlawful and unjustified. He also complained about the procedure by which he had sought to challenge the lawfulness of his detention. He notably complained that the court orders extending his detention had been too abstract and concise, the reasons behind them simply repeating grounds for detention provided for by law without explaining how they applied in his particular case; and, that his appeals against those court orders had not been examined in good time.

Article 5 § 1 (c)

The Court considered that, even if the applicant had been able to prove that he had had no intention of fleeing Latvia upon release from detention, the reasonable suspicion of him having committed a crime, which had even been supported by new evidence, had been a sufficient ground to detain him until his trial and conviction. It held unanimously that there had been no violation of Article 5 § 1 (c).

Article 5 § 4

Reasoning behind extensions of the applicant's detention

Even though the reasoning used to apply and extend the applicant's pre-trial detention had been fairly abstract and concise in the specific circumstances of the applicant's case, notably the fact that he had no other link to the territory of Latvia, the illegality of his residence status could have legitimately been taken into account by the national courts in deciding on his detention. The Court therefore held unanimously that there had been no violation of Article 5 § 4 in that respect.

Speediness of review of the applicant's detention on remand

Concerning the decisions of 4 October 2002, 30 January, and 30 May 2003, which had been reviewed by the courts between fourteen days - and one month and two days - later, following the applicant's appeals, the Court found that the requirement of speediness in examining those appeals had been observed, and there had therefore been no violation of Article 5 § 4.

As regards the decision of 29 November 2002, the Court noted that the delay of 89 days in deciding on the applicant's appeal against his detention had been chiefly caused by the Centre District Court's erroneous decision to return the applicant's appeal to him for translation and held, unanimously , that there had been a violation of Article 5 § 4. Finally, in respect of the decision of 31 March 2003, the Court held unanimously that the delay of one month and eight days had not been explained by the authorities and, therefore, there had been a violation of Article 5 § 4.

Koriyski v. Bulgaria (no. 19257/03) (Importance 3) – Violation of Article 5 § 3 – Excessive length of pre-trial detention – Alleged violation of Article 5 § 4 – Failure to speedily examine the applicant's applications for release – Lack of an effective remedy to challenge the lawfulness of the detention – Violation of Article 8 – Monitoring of the applicant's correspondence with his lawyer by the prison staff

The applicant was remanded in custody on a charge of robbery. He complained about the length of his detention. He also alleged that his applications for release had not been examined effectively or promptly and that his correspondence with his lawyer had been monitored. The Court found that there has been a violation of Article 5 § 3 due to the length of the applicant's detention. It also held that his applications for the release have not been examined promptly by a tribunal in breach with Article 5 § 4. The Court found also a violation of Article 8, on account of the monitoring of the applicant's correspondence with his lawyer in detention.

Hokic and Hrustic v. Italy (no. 3449/05) (Importance 2) – 1 December 2009 – Violation of Article 5 § 1 – Unlawful immigration detention

The applicants are nationals of Bosnia and Herzegovina of Roma origin. When the application was lodged they were living with their children in a travellers' encampment in Rome. They argued against their detention for the purpose of their deportation, arguing that the deportation orders had been set aside. The Court held that there has been a violation of Article 5 § 1 on account of the applicants' detention, following a court decision ordering their release.

Eberhard and M. v. Slovenia (no. 8673/05 and 9733/05) (Importance 1) – 1 December 2009 – Violation of Article 8 – Domestic authorities' failure to meet their positive obligation as regards the enforcement of the access order issued in administrative proceedings and the conduct of court proceedings concerning access and custody rights of the applicant concerning his daughter

In April 2001 the first applicant's wife, M.E., together with the second applicant, M., then aged four, moved out of the flat in which they all lived and subsequently filed a petition for divorce.

Following administrative proceedings, access arrangements - which became final and enforceable in October 2002 - were made. According to these arrangements, Mr Eberhard could spend four hours a week with his daughter. However, M.E. persistently failed to comply with the order and refused M.'s father all access to their daughter. In November 2002 Mr Eberhard asked for the access order to be enforced but despite a decision granting the enforcement and imposing a fine on M.E. she continued to prevent Mr Eberhard from seeing their daughter. Mr Eberhard' notified the Šentjur Administrative Unit (the Unit) thirteen times about M.E's continued refusal to let him see M. and the Unit imposed fines on M.E. on six occasions. M.E. appealed against the fines and the relevant Ministry ordered the Unit to re-examine them. It is not clear whether the authorities took any subsequent steps in the context of these proceedings.

In June 2001, further to the divorce application filed by M.E., the competent court had issued an interim decision granting M.E. provisional custody of M. pending the outcome of the proceedings. In February 2002 the court granted Mr Eberhard and M.E. divorce and gave M.E. custody of their daughter. In June 2003, Mr Eberhard brought proceedings seeking custody of M. on the ground that M.E. continued not to let him see the child. He also requested an interim order asking for custody over M. pending the outcome of the proceedings. M.E. continuously failed to cooperate with the court and as a result an interim decision was issued only in May 2006. The court rejected Mr Eberhard's request for provisional custody; it granted him, however, the right to spend one afternoon a week with his daughter when he would pick her up from school, as well as every second weekend and part of the holidays. In January 2008, the proceedings were finally resolved the parties agreeing on new access arrangements and withdrawing all claims they had pending before the court against each other.

Mr Eberhard and his daughter M. complained about the authorities' failure to ensure contact between the two of them despite the access arrangements decided in administrative proceedings. The two applicants also complained about delays in the court proceedings concerning child custody and access arrangements.

Having noted that M.E. had sole custody of the second applicant after the interim order of June 2001, the Court found that the first applicant had no standing to act on the second applicant's behalf. The Court therefore limited its examination of the case to the part that concerned Mr Eberhard, hereafter referred to as "the applicant".

The Court recalled that Article 8 included for parents a right that steps be taken to reunite them with their children and an obligation on the national authorities to facilitate such reunions. In cases of enforcement of decisions concerning contacts with children, the authorities had to do everything necessary to execute such decisions swiftly, as the passage of time could have irreversible consequences for the relationship between children and parents who did not live together. The Court noted that Mr Eberhard had had visiting rights as the authorities had established that M. had an interest in maintaining contacts with her father. The access arrangements of August 2001 had not, however, been enforced between the moment they became final, in October 2002, and the time when new access arrangements had been determined by court in May 2006. M.E. had continuously refused to let Mr Eberhard see his daughter. That had resulted in Mr Eberhard having had contact with his daughter only three times during the first three years.

The Court found that the Slovenian authorities had failed to make effective efforts to execute the access arrangements. Furthermore, the court proceedings for access arrangements and custody had lasted over four and a half years and only five hearings had been held in all during that period. The authorities had not reacted adequately to the lack of cooperation by M.E. during those proceedings; neither had they acted with the utmost urgency as required by the situation. Accordingly, the Slovenian authorities had not done everything possible to ensure contact between Mr Eberhard and his daughter, as determined in the access arrangements, nor to have the court proceedings for access and custody rights completed speedily; as a result there had been almost no contact for over four years between M. and Mr Eberhard, in violation of Article 8.

Stolder v. Italy (no. 24418/03) (Importance 3) – Violation of Article 8 – Monitoring of the applicant's correspondence by prison personnel

Since the applicant's arrest in 1992 for, among other offences, criminal conspiracy, he has been held in several Italian prisons. He complained that he was made subject to a special prison regime which entailed restrictions on, among other things, visits and communications. The Court held that there has been a violation of Article 8 due to the monitoring of the applicant's correspondence.

Zaunegger v. Germany (no. 22028/04) (Importance 3) – 3 December 2009 – Violation of Article 14 in conjunction with Article 8 – Unjustified discrimination against unmarried father in comparison with divorced fathers concerning the applicant's request for joint custody

The applicant has a daughter born out of wedlock in 1995 who grew up with both parents until their separation in August 1998 and from that time until January 2001 lived with the applicant. After the child had moved to live with the mother, the parents reached an agreement according to which the applicant would have contact with the child on a regular basis.

Pursuant to the relevant provisions of domestic law, Article 1626a § 2 of the German Civil Code, the mother held sole custody for the child. As she was not willing to agree on a joint custody declaration, the applicant applied for a joint custody order. The Cologne District Court dismissed the application, holding that under German law joint custody for parents of children born out of wedlock could only be obtained through a joint declaration, marriage or a court order, the latter requiring the consent of the other parent. The decision was upheld by the Cologne Court of Appeal in October 2003. Both courts referred to a leading judgment of the Federal Constitutional Court of 29 January 2003, which had found that the relevant provision of the Civil Code was constitutional with regard to the situation of parents of children born out of wedlock who had separated after 1 July 1998, the date an amended Law on Family Matters entered into force. In December 2003 the Federal Constitutional Court declined to consider the applicant's constitutional complaint.

The applicant complained in particular that the application of Article 1626a § 2 of the German Civil Code amounted to unjustified discrimination against unmarried fathers on the grounds of sex and in comparison with divorced fathers.

The Court noted that by dismissing the applicant's request for joint custody without examining whether it would be in the child's interest – the only possible decision under national law – the domestic courts had afforded him a different treatment in comparison with the mother and in comparison with married fathers. The Court first considered that the provisions on which the domestic courts' decisions had been based were aimed at protecting the welfare of a child born out of wedlock by determining its legal representative and avoiding disputes between the parents over custody questions. The decisions had therefore pursued a legitimate aim. It further considered that there could be valid reasons to deny the father of a child born out of wedlock participation in parental authority, for example if a lack of communication between the parents risked harming the welfare of the child. These considerations did not apply in the present case, however, as the applicant continued to take care of the child on a regular basis.

The Court noted that while it was true that legal proceedings on the attribution of parental authority could unsettle a child, domestic law provided for judicial review of the attribution of parental authority in cases where the parents were or had been married or had opted for joint parental authority. The Court did not see sufficient reasons why the situation of the present case should allow for less judicial scrutiny. It considered that there was not a reasonable relationship of proportionality between the general exclusion of judicial review of the initial attribution of sole custody to the mother and the aim pursued, namely the protection of the best interests of a child born out of wedlock. The Court therefore held by 6 votes to 1 that there had been a violation of Article 14 taken together with Article 8.

Judge Schmitt expressed a dissenting opinion, which is annexed to the judgment.

Omojudi v. the United Kingdom (no. 1820/08) (Importance 3) – 24 November 2009 – Violation of Article 8 – Deportation to Nigeria following a criminal conviction

The applicant is currently living in Nigeria. He had been living in the United Kingdom with his spouse, his three children and with his grandchild from 1982 until 2008, when he was deported to Nigeria. In 2005 he and his spouse were granted an Indefinite Leave to Remain. The applicant complained that, following his conviction for a sexual offence, he had been deported to Nigeria. Having regard to the strength of the applicant's family ties to the United Kingdom, his length of residence, and the difficulty that his youngest children would face if they were to relocate to Nigeria, the Court found that the applicant's deportation was not proportionate to the legitimate aim pursued and it held therefore a violation of Article 8 of the Convention.

- Freedom of expression

Karsai v. Hungary (no. 5380/07) (Importance 1) – 1 December 2009 – Violation of Article 10 – Domestic courts' failure to establish any pressing social need for prioritising the protection of the personality rights of a participant in a public debate above the applicant's right to freedom of expression

The applicant is a Hungarian historian and university professor. In 2004 there was a public debate in Hungary as to whether a statue should be set up to commemorate the former Prime Minister Pál Teleki, who had cooperated with Nazi Germany and had been involved in the passing of anti-Semitic legislation. Mr. Karsai published an article criticising the right-wing press, including the author B.T., for praising the politician's role and for making anti-Semitic statements. B.T. brought a civil action against the applicant, claiming that his reputation had been harmed by a passage in the article that could be referred to him and which included the expression "bashing the Jews". The Regional Court did not grant the claim, holding in essence that the impugned statement had not concerned B.T. himself but the right-wing media as such. The decision was later reversed by the Court of Appeal, which held that the statement could be seen as relating to B.T. and that the applicant had failed to prove that it was true. It ordered the applicant to publish a rectification at his own expense and to bear the legal costs. The Court of Appeal's decision was upheld by the Supreme Court in June 2006.

The applicant complained that the Hungarian courts' decisions amounted to a violation of his right to freedom of expression. In particular, he argued that the obligation to arrange for a public rectification was a disproportionately severe sanction, putting his credibility as a historian at stake.

The Court did not see a reason to depart from the Hungarian courts' findings that the impugned statement in the applicant's article, made with regard to the right-wing press in general, could also be considered as indirectly referring to the plaintiff B.T. and thereby affecting his reputation. However, contrary to the domestic courts, it could not find that the dispute concerned a pure statement of fact, an assessment that would limit the protection under Article 10. In the article the applicant had argued that the apology of a politician with well-known anti-Semitic convictions amounted to participation in the process, ongoing in the extreme right-wing press, of trivialising his racist policies. The Court noted that the applicant wrote the article in question in the course of a debate of utmost public interest, concerning Hungary's coming to terms with its totalitarian past. It therefore considered that its publication deserved the high level of protection granted to the press in view of its functions in a democratic society. The Court also pointed out that the plaintiff, by being the author of articles widely published in the popular daily press as part of the debate, had voluntarily exposed himself to public criticism. In this context even harsh criticism expressed directly would have been protected by Article 10 of the Convention, while the applicant's disagreement with B.T.'s views had been phrased only indirectly. With regard to the nature and severity of the sanction, the Court considered that, although the applicant was subject to civil-law rather than criminal sanctions, the obligation to publish a rectification affected his professional credibility as a historian and was therefore capable of producing an intimidating effect. The Court concluded that the domestic courts had not convincingly established that protecting the reputation of a participant in a public debate was more important than the applicant's right to freedom of expression and the general interest in promoting this freedom where issues of public interest were concerned. Accordingly there had been a violation of Article 10.

Aleksandr Krutov v. Russia (no. 15469/04) (Importance 3) – 3 December 2009 – Violation of Article 10 – Domestic authorities' failure to strike a fair balance between a journalist's right to freedom of expression and the importance of protecting a public prosecutor's reputation

In January 2003 the applicant, a journalist, published an article in a local newspaper, "Nedelya Oblasti", in which he examined the interrelations between the political groups in the Saratov Region during the year 2002. In particular, he wrote about the Saratov Regional Prosecutor, Mr B., having received "gifts" from the town hall in exchange for support he had provided to some of its members including by shielding them from criminal prosecution. B. brought court proceedings against the applicant, complaining that the article damaged his honour, dignity and professional reputation. The court found in favour of B. While it accepted the facts as presented by the applicant in that article, namely that the "gifts" had been received by B. and that criminal proceedings had only been brought in respect of one town hall member who had subsequently been acquitted, it held that the article was defamatory as it contained statements of fact in respect of B. which had not been proven by the applicant. The court fined both the applicant and the newspaper and ordered the newspaper to publish a rectification.

The applicant complained about being found liable for defamation for having written the article while he had only expressed his opinion based on facts related to the political environment in the region at the time.

The Court first recalled that the applicant had been a journalist and that the press had a duty to impart information and ideas on all matters of public interest. The article had raised important issues and the applicant had been entitled to bring them to the attention of the public.

Referring to its well-established case law the Court found that, as B. had been a civil servant in office, he had had to tolerate broader criticism than had he been a private individual. The Court further observed that the Russian authorities had confined themselves to analysing the importance to protect the public prosecutor's reputation and had failed to strike a fair balance between that and the journalist's freedom of expression. In addition, the Court was satisfied that the applicant's assumptions expressed in his article had not been incidental but based on sufficient facts as accepted by the domestic court.

The Court concluded that the applicant had expressed in his article a value judgement the truthfulness of which had not been susceptible of proof. In addition, the applicant had not used abusive language. The Court held unanimously that the authorities had not justified the fine they had imposed on the applicant for defamation, in violation of Article 10.

Flux v. Moldova (no. 7) (no. 25367/05) (Importance 3) – 24 November 2009 – Violation of Article 10 – Interference with the applicant newspaper's right to freedom of expression was not "necessary in a democratic society", as the applicant newspaper acted in good faith in reporting on an issue of genuine public interest

The applicant, Flux, is a newspaper registered in Moldova. In April 2004, it published an article entitled "Four more communists have obtained housing on our money". The article reported about four apartments apparently built with public money in a former Parliament warehouse and indicated that "according to certain sources in Parliament, who have asked to remain anonymous, the future owners of the relevant apartments include V.S., the president of the communist fraction in Parliament…", as well as other politicians. The article, criticising the Parliament for its lack of transparency, added that the newspaper had tried to verify this information by telephoning V.S., the Speaker and Deputy Speaker of the Parliament and other State officials, but that it had been impossible to reach them. However, the newspaper visited the apartments and took pictures. Mr Secăreanu, a Member of Parliament, also informed the newspaper that he had been told by the head of the Parliament apparatus (for whom one of the apartments was allegedly reserved) and another Deputy Speaker in the Parliament that the Parliament had paid for the apartments. The article further described Mr Secăreanu's efforts to obtain information on the expenditure by the Parliament and the Presidency from the President of the Court of Accounts - information made secret by the latter -, as well as his efforts to obtain that information from the Parliament leadership.

In May 2004, V.S. brought court proceedings against the applicant newspaper, claiming that he had been defamed by its article. In June 2004, The Buiucani District Court accepted this claim in full, awarding damages to V.S. and ordering the newspaper to publish an apology. The court found that the expressions used had been defamatory and that the applicant newspaper had not submitted any evidence to prove that the information published about V.S. had been true. In September 2004 the Chişinău Court of Appeal confirmed this judgment but reduced the award made. In March 2005, the Supreme Court of Justice rejected the applicant newspaper's appeal on points of law.

Flux complained that its conviction for defamation amounted to a breach of its right to freedom of expression, guaranteed by article 10. The article had been aimed at criticising the Parliament for alleged lack of transparency, rather than at disparaging V.S. (or any other person) specifically. It had dealt with the issue of whether the Parliament leadership had spent public money in a non-transparent manner, which had been a matter of genuine public interest, calling for particular protection under Article 10.

The Court noted that in situations such as in this case, where on the one hand a statement of fact has been made and insufficient evidence adduced to prove it, and on the other hand the journalist has been discussing an issue of genuine public interest, it was paramount to verify whether the journalist acted professionally and in good faith. The Court considered that the applicant newspaper had acted in a professional manner and had attempted in good faith to verify its facts as far as it had been reasonably possible. The lack of any official information on the matter at issue, despite the applicant newspaper's attempts to obtain such details, plus the other uncontested facts raising legitimate doubts as to the legitimacy of the distribution of the apartments, could reasonably have prompted the journalist to report on anything that had been available, including unconfirmed rumours. Significantly, the applicant newspaper had clearly informed its readers in the article itself that it had been unable to verify the truth of the information received, and had thus avoided presenting the rumours on which it had been reporting as established facts. The Court held, unanimously, that there had been a violation of Article 10.

Ieremeiov v. Romania (no. 1) (no. 75300/01) and Ieremeiov v. Romania (no. 2) (no. 4637/02) (Importance 2) – 24 November 2009 – Violation of Article 10 – Domestic authorities' failure to provide sufficient reasons to justify the interference with the applicant's right to freedom of expression – Violation of Article 6 § 1 – Infringement of the right to a fair trial on account of the domestic courts' quashing of the first-instance judgment and re-examining the merits of the accusations against the applicant without hearing evidence from him and without allowing him to present his defence

A former journalist of the newspaper Ziua de Vest, Mr Ieremeiov, had two sets of criminal proceedings brought against him for defamation following the publication in June 2000 of articles that he had written: one accusing Dr. P., the Head of the Timiş Public Health Service of sexual harassment of an intern and a second one reporting on rumours about the Mayor of Buziaş' collaboration with the Securitate (the intelligence service during the communist period). In both sets of proceedings the courts acquitted the applicant at first instance of defamation but subsequently, quashing those decisions, re-examined the merits of the cases and gave the applicant administrative fines. He was further ordered to pay compensation for non-pecuniary damage (a total of ROL 25,000,000 in both cases – the equivalent of EUR 5,822). The courts found in particular that the applicant had intended to denigrate Dr. P. by publishing his photograph in an article which referred to a "scandal in the medical world" and "sexual blackmail and harassment". They found that the applicant had had the same intention with regard to the Mayor of Buziaş when reporting on his alleged collaboration with the Securitate and the fact that the mayor, under surveillance, was on file about the matter. The applicant was invited to address the court before the end of the hearings in both cases but was not given the opportunity to give evidence or allowed time to prepare and present his defence.

Mr Ieremeiov alleged in particular that both sets of proceedings brought against him had been unfair and that the resulting fines and compensation he had been ordered to pay were in breach of his right to freedom of expression.

Article 6 § 1

Firstly, the Court found that, although the penalties – administrative fines – imposed on the applicant had not been severe in either of the defamation cases against him, nonetheless they had amounted to a criminal conviction within the meaning of the Convention. Furthermore, the fact that the applicant had been able to address the domestic courts before the end of the hearings in his cases could not be equated with his right to be heard during trial. The failure to hear the applicant in person was difficult to reconcile with the requirements of a fair trial in cases such as these where the courts had to carry out an assessment of the subjective element of the alleged offence, that is, the applicant's intent to denigrate. The Court therefore concluded that by quashing the first-instance judgments and re-examining the merits of the accusations against the applicant without hearing evidence from him and without allowing him to present his defence, the Romanian courts had failed to comply with the requirements of a fair trial. It held unanimously that there had been a violation of Article 6 § 1 in both cases.

Article 10

The Court noted that it was not in dispute between the parties that the decisions had constituted an interference with the applicant's freedom of expression. That interference had been "prescribed by law" and had served a legitimate aim, namely the protection of the rights and reputations of others. Firstly, the Court found that the articles in question, concerning two public figures, had dealt with issues – indecent behaviour towards an intern and rumours of collaboration with the communist political police – which merited legitimate public concern. Given the context and seriousness of the allegations, the articles had therefore contributed to a debate of public interest. Furthermore, there had been facts to support the applicant's statements: the intern had told the courts that she had made accusations about Dr. P.; two witnesses had admitted in court that they had provided information to the applicant about the Mayor's collaboration with the Securitate. Moreover, aside from the fact that the Court attached no importance to the Government's argument that the applicant had acted in bad faith when writing both articles – as the criminal proceedings had lacked the requirements of a fair trial – there was nothing in the case files to indicate that the applicant had tried intentionally to denigrate Dr. P. or the Mayor of Buziaş. In conclusion, although the fines and damages imposed on the applicant had been moderate, the Court found that the Romanian authorities had not given relevant and sufficient reasons in either of the cases to justify the interference with the applicant's freedom of expression. The interference had not therefore been "necessary in a democratic society" and the Court held unanimously in both cases that there had been a violation of Article 10.

- Right to free elections

Seyidzade v. Azerbaijan (no. 37700/05) (Importance 3) – 3 December 2009 – Violation of Article 3 of Protocol No. 1 – Registration of a candidate in parliamentary elections refused arbitrarily

Mr Seyidzade held the following positions: head of the education department of the Caucasus Muslims Board (Qafqaz Müsəlmanlar İdarəsi, the official governing body of Muslim religious organisations in Azerbaijan), member of the Qazi (Islamic Judges') Council (Qazılar Şurası) of the Caucasus Muslims Board, and director of the Sumgayit branch of Baku Islamic University. He was also a founder and editor-in-chief of a journal with Islamic religious content. On an unspecified date, he applied to the electoral commission to be registered as a candidate for the November 2005 parliamentary elections. He submitted with his application an undertaking to terminate any professional activity incompatible with the office of Member of Parliament and by August 2005 he had resigned from all his positions involving professional religious activities. However, the electoral commission refused to register him as a candidate for the elections finding that he continued to act as a professional clergyman. Mr Seyidzade appealed unsuccessfully before several court instances. While acknowledging that he had resigned from his positions, the courts found that this fact did not exclude his engaging in professional religious activity which, in accordance with the Constitution and the Electoral Code, was an obstacle to standing for parliamentary elections.

Mr Seyidzade complained of the authorities' arbitrary refusal to register him as a candidate in the parliamentary elections.

The Court first noted that the applicant had resigned from all his positions which could have been interpreted as "professional religious activity" believing that this would have made him eligible to stand for election. However, without even specifying any reasons for their finding, the electoral authorities had considered him still a professional clergyman and consequently belonging to the category of persons affected by the domestic law restriction on people eligible to stand for election. The courts, like the electoral commission, had failed to point out on the basis of what definition and evidence had he been considered a clergyman. The Court found that the relevant domestic law had not been clear or precise and thus had left considerable room for speculation as to the definition of the categories of persons whose rights had been restricted. The Azerbaijani authorities had not submitted examples of consistent interpretation given in domestic practice to the scope of the legal restriction on the right to stand for elections. In fact, the authorities had arbitrarily applied the restrictions in respect of Mr Seyidzade and had thus prevented him, without a clear or sufficient explanation, from exercising his right to free elections, in violation on Article 3 of Protocol 1.

- Freedom of movement

Gochev v. Bulgaria (no. 34383/03) (Importance 1) – 26 November 2009 – Violation of Article 2 of Protocol No. 4 – Disproportionate interference with the applicant's right to freedom of movement on account of the withdrawal of his passport for more than six years without appropriate review

In October 1999 and April 2001 enforcement orders were issued against the applicant at the request of private companies to which the applicant owed money. In decisions of 21 December 2001 and 27 May 2002, in accordance with the Bulgarian Identity Documents Act 1998, the director of the Department for Identity Documents ordered the applicant's passport to be withdrawn and instructed the competent authorities not to issue him a new one.

The applicant made several appeals to the Supreme Administrative Court, but to no avail: the court upheld the impugned decisions. His creditors having made no further claims, the enforcement proceedings against the applicant were discontinued and he has been free to leave the country since 17 May 2008.

The applicant alleged that his freedom to leave the country had been violated.

The Court noted that a degree of ambiguity in the law on which the authorities had based their decision to restrict the applicant's freedom of movement could not in itself lead to the conclusion that the interference had been unforeseeable to the extent that it was unlawful. The Court reiterated that the domestic authorities were under an obligation to ensure that a breach of an individual's right to leave his or her country was, from the outset and throughout its duration, justified and proportionate in view of the circumstances. Such review should normally be carried out, at least in the final instance, by the courts, since they offered the best guarantees of the independence, impartiality and lawfulness of the procedures.

In this case, however, the applicant had been prevented from leaving the country for more than six years and four months, without any judicial review of the measures concerned. Once the measure had been imposed the authorities had not sought relevant information on the applicant's personal situation or the circumstances of his failure to pay his debts. Nor had the courts effectively reviewed the need for the measure. The applicant had thus been subjected to measures of an automatic nature, with no limitation as to their scope or duration. The Court accordingly found that the Bulgarian authorities had failed in their duty to ensure that the interference with the applicant's right to leave the country was, from the outset and throughout its duration, justified and proportionate in the light of the circumstances. There had therefore been a violation of Article 2 of Protocol no. 4.

3. Repetitive cases

The judgments listed below are based on a classification which figures in the Registry's press release: "In which the Court has reached the same findings as in similar cases raising the same issues under the Convention".

The role of the NHRSs may be of particular importance in this respect: they could check whether the circumstances which led to the said repetitive cases have changed or whether the necessary execution measures have been adopted.

4. Length of proceedings cases

The judgments listed below are based on a classification which figures in the Registry's press release.

The role of the NHRSs may be of particular relevance in that respect as well, as these judgments often reveal systemic defects, which the NHRSs may be able to fix with the competent national authorities.

With respect to the length of non criminal proceedings cases, the reasonableness of the length of proceedings is assessed in the light of the circumstances of the case and with reference to the following criteria: the complexity of the case, the conduct of the applicant and the relevant authorities and what was at stake for the applicant in the dispute (See for instance Cocchiarella v. Italy [GC], no. 64886/01, § 68, published in ECHR 2006, and Frydlender v. France [GC], no. 30979/96, § 43, ECHR 2000-VII).

C. The communicated cases

The European Court of Human Rights publishes on a weekly basis a list of the communicated cases on its Website. These are cases concerning individual applications which are pending before the Court. They are communicated by the Court to the respondent State's Government with a statement of facts, the applicant's complaints and the questions put by the Court to the Government concerned. The decision to communicate a case lies with one of the Court's Chamber which is in charge of the case.

There is in general a gap of three weeks between the date of the communication and the date of the publication of the batch on the Website. Below you will find the links to the lists of the weekly communicated cases which were published on the Court's Website:

- on 30 November 2009 : link
- on 7 December 2009 : link

The list itself contains links to the statement of facts and the questions to the parties. This is a tool for NHRSs to be aware of issues involving their countries but also of other issues brought before the Court which may reveal structural problems. Below you will find a list of cases of particular interest identified by the NHRS Unit.

NB. The statements of facts and complaints have been prepared by the Registry (solely in one of the official languages) on the basis of the applicant's submissions. The Court cannot be held responsible for the veracity of the information contained therein.

Please note that the Irish Human Rights Commission (IHRC) issues a monthly table on priority cases before the European Court of Human Rights with a focus on asylum/ immigration, data protection, anti-terrorism/ rule of law and disability cases for the attention of the European Group of NHRIs with a view to suggesting possible amicus curiae cases to the members of the Group. Des Hogan from the IHRC can provide you with these tables (dhogan@ihrc.ie).

B. European Committee for the Prevention of Torture and Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (CPT)

Council of Europe anti-torture Committee publishes report on Azerbaijan (26.11.09)

The CPT has published on 26 November the report on its ad hoc visit to Azerbaijan in December 2008, together with the response of the Azerbaijani Government. These documents have been made public at the request of the Azerbaijani authorities.

During the visit, the CPT's delegation reviewed the situation at Gobustan Prison (previously visited in 2005 and 2006). The delegation received several credible allegations from life-sentenced prisoners of deliberate physical ill-treatment and excessive use of force by prison officers. In their response, the Azerbaijani authorities indicate that staff at Gobustan Prison has been instructed to apply physical force and special means only in exceptional circumstances determined by law.

In the units for lifers, the delegation observed some improvements to material conditions. However, life-sentenced prisoners continued to spend 23 hours a day locked up in their cells, without being offered any form of organised activity. The CPT has called upon the Azerbaijani authorities to take steps to devise and implement a comprehensive regime of out-of-cell activities for life-sentenced prisoners. Further, the Committee has stressed once again that it can see no justification for keeping life-sentenced prisoners apart from other prisoners. The authorities' response makes reference to plans to set up workshops and sports facilities at Gobustan Prison, as well as to enable inmates to receive education.

During the 2008 visit, the CPT's delegation also carried out a visit to the Central Penitentiary Hospital in Baku. It found that nursing staff resources were insufficient and that no health-care staff was present in the wards after 4 p.m. The delegation gained the impression that the treatment provided at the hospital's internal diseases, narcology and psychiatry wards left a lot to be desired. The CPT has recommended that a thorough assessment of the hospital's health-care services be carried out. The authorities' response refers to various training courses for health-care staff of the hospital and the involvement of experts from the Ministry of Health in the treatment of prisoners.

At the Republican Psychiatric Hospital No. 1 in Mashtaga, the CPT's delegation heard a number of allegations from patients of occasional physical ill-treatment, mostly by orderlies and occasionally by nurses. Living conditions in the wards which had already been refurbished were on the whole acceptable, but conditions in the non-refurbished wards were very poor. The worst situation was observed in Ward 12, conditions in the ward's two isolation rooms being particularly bad. According to the authorities' response, a refurbishment of Ward 12 has been launched and the isolation rooms have been abolished. As regards the Regional Psycho-Neurological Dispensary in Sheki (visited in 2006), the delegation observed a number of positive changes. That said, the dormitories remained overcrowded, dilapidated and impersonal, and lacked privacy. The response refers to a decision to move the dispensary to a new hospital to be built in Sheki region.

More generally, the CPT has recommended that steps be taken at psychiatric establishments to adopt a policy on the use of means of restraint, and that the recording of information on the use of means of restraint be improved. Other recommendations concern the legal safeguards in the context of involuntary hospitalisation and the setting up of a system for regular visits to psychiatric establishments by independent outside bodies responsible for the inspection of patients' care.

Council of Europe anti-torture Committee: visits in 2010 (03.12.09)

In 2010, as part of its programme of "periodic" visits, the CPT intends to examine the treatment of persons deprived of their liberty in the following ten countries: Albania, Armenia, Bulgaria, Czech Republic, France, Georgia, Germany, Ireland, Romania, "the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia". Other "ad hoc" visits that appear to the CPT to be required in the circumstances will also be organised during 2010.

C. European Commission against Racism and Intolerance (ECRI)

Statement by the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance on the ban of the construction of minarets in Switzerland (01.12.09)

ECRI wishes to express its deep concern about the results of the Swiss popular initiative which approved the inclusion, in the Federal Constitution, of a new provision banning the construction of minarets.

In its report on Switzerland published on 15 September 2009, ECRI clearly regretted that "an initiative that infringes human rights can be put to vote". ECRI added that it "very much hoped that it would be rejected".

The figure of 57,5% in favour of the ban, and the fact that the Federal Council's and other key Swiss stakeholders' call to vote against went unheeded, are difficult to reconcile with the efforts made to combat prejudice and discrimination in the country over the last years. This vote will result in discrimination against Muslims and infringe their freedom of religion. As ECRI has warned in its report, this would risk creating further stigmatisation and racist prejudice against persons belonging to the Muslim community. ECRI calls on the Swiss authorities to study carefully the consequences of this vote and do their utmost to find solutions that are in keeping with international human rights law. In the meantime, ECRI emphasises the urgent need for the Swiss authorities to follow-up on its recommendation "to pursue their efforts and dialogue with Muslim representatives*".*

D. Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities (FCNM)

Slovak Republic: visit of the Advisory Committee on the Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities (03.12.09)

A delegation of the Advisory Committee on the Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities visited Bratislava and Kosice from 30 November - 04 December 2009 in the context of the monitoring of the implementation of this convention in the Slovak Republic.

This is the third visit of the Advisory Committee to the Slovak Republic. The Delegation had meetings with the representatives of all relevant ministries, public officials, as well as persons belonging to national minorities and Human Rights NGOs.

The Delegation included Ms Ilze BRANDS-KEHRIS (First Vice-President of the Advisory Committee and member elected in respect of Latvia), Mr Giorgi MELADZE (member of the Advisory Committee elected in respect of Georgia) and Mr Alan PHILLIPS (President of the Advisory Committee and member elected in respect of the United Kingdom). They were accompanied by Ms Eva KONECNA of the Secretariat on the Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities.

Note: The Slovak Republic submitted its third State Report under the Framework Convention in July 2009. Following its visit, the Advisory Committee will adopt its own report (called Opinion), which will be sent to the Government for comments. The Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe will then adopt conclusions and recommendations in respect of the Slovak Republic.

Ukraine: statement by PACE pre-election delegation (26.11.09)

PACE pre-election delegation observed an overall free and competitive atmosphere in Ukraine in the run-up to the 17 January 2010 Presidential election. The situation with the freedom of the media improved significantly after the 2004 elections. The delegation notes the commitment and endeavours of journalists, although it recognises that the media works under heavy financial and business influences. In order to assist more efficiently the Ukrainian people to make a well-founded choice, politicians should have no role in setting the agenda for the media. Intimidation is, hopefully, a thing of the past.

Minarets in Switzerland – reaction of PACE President (30.11.09)

“Although it expresses the popular will, the decision to ban the construction of new minarets in Switzerland is a source of profound concern to me”, said PACE President, Lluís Maria de Puig, commenting on 30 November on the referendum of 28 November. “On the one hand, this position reflects fears within the Swiss population – and the population of Europe as a whole – regarding Islamic fundamentalism; on the other, far from helping to tackle the causes of fundamentalism, it is likely to encourage feelings of exclusion and deepen the rifts in our societies”, he added.

Russia: PACE condemns terrorist attack (30.11.09)

"My most sincere condolences to the families of those who lost their lives as a result of Friday's bomb attack," said President de Puig on 30 November, responding to reports of a terrorist attack on the Moscow to St. Petersburg railway line. "The Assembly condemns terrorism as an affront to the civilised values of our Organisation and its member States," he added.

PACE President to invite Dmitri Medvedev to address Assembly (04.12.09)

In this connection, Mr de Puig announced his intention to invite the President of the Russian Federation, Dmitri Medvedev, to present before the parliamentarians of the 47 member States his recent initiatives concerning the new European Security Architecture as well as the creation of an international tribunal on the acts of piracy.

The PACE President took this occasion to call on Russia to increase its involvement in the work of the Council of Europe. "The future of Europe cannot be built without Russia," he said.

He also expressed his satisfaction at the moves in Russia towards the ratification of Protocol No. 14 to the European Convention of Human Rights and stressed that it was of crucial importance that the ratification occur as soon as possible.

The PACE President was in Saint Petersburg on the occasion of the 33rd plenary session of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS). North Caucasus: "Persistent pattern of impunity", reports Commissioner Hammarberg (24.11.09)

"Stability in the North Caucasus region has not been achieved. Increased activity by illegal armed groups, the lack of effective investigations into disappearances and killings, and murders of human rights activists are of particular concern" said the Council of Europe Commissioner for Human Rights, Thomas Hammarberg, publishing his report based on the visit to Chechnya and Ingushetia carried out last September. The Commissioner points out that while state authorities must protect the public from terrorism and actions of illegal armed groups, counter-terrorism measures should be carried out in full compliance with human rights norms. "The Russian authorities should specify the applicable rules and human rights safeguards for all counter-terrorism operations. Particular care should be taken to prevent the possibility of extrajudicial executions through provision and implementation of precise guidelines governing the use of force."

He further recalls that the response to terrorism must never be allowed to degenerate into acts of torture or ill-treatment. "Human rights standards must be strictly applied in the detention of terrorist suspects and during court proceedings. Access to a lawyer and a doctor should be granted at the outset of custody, and records must be kept whenever a person is deprived of his liberty. In addition, places of detention should be subject to regular independent monitoring. Fair trial guarantees should be respected and any evidence suspected of having been obtained through the use of torture or inhuman or degrading treatment should always be excluded from court proceedings."

The Commissioner urges the authorities to conduct effective and independent investigations into alleged abductions, disappearances, extrajudicial executions and other unlawful killings, as well as unlawful detention. "Such practices must be eliminated and those responsible brought to justice. A close oversight of security forces in the fight against illegal armed groups is also necessary." Furthermore, he stresses that collective punishment of relatives of alleged terrorists or members of illegal armed groups must be stopped.

The Commissioner highlights the importance of carrying out thorough investigations into past disappearances and identifying the dead bodies buried in the known sites in Chechnya. "It is essential that the exhumation of corpses takes place in an orderly and methodological manner, demonstrating due sensitivity to the relatives concerned. All realistic possibilities for providing sufficient forensic expertise and facilities for the task at hand should be considered."

While serious efforts to reinforce the rule of law are observed, Commissioner Hammarberg considers that further steps should be taken to ensure the desired result of more effective investigations. "Patterns of impunity persist" he said. "Sustained efforts should be pursued to combat corruption in the judiciary and law enforcement agencies. The protection of witnesses during investigations and court cases should also be ensured."

Noting the value of the human rights work performed by non-governmental organisations, the Commissioner strongly emphasises the need to promote safe and favourable conditions for their activities. "The recent murders and violent attacks against human rights activists must be investigated to ensure the criminal accountability and punishment of the perpetrators."

Commissioner Hammarberg continues dialogue with Hungarian Prime Minister to eradicate intolerance and discrimination (26.11.09)

The Council of Europe Commissioner for Human Rights, Thomas Hammarberg, published on 26 November a letter sent to the Prime Minister of Hungary, Mr Gordon Bajnai, on the fight against intolerance, discrimination and racism affecting members of minority groups, in particular Roma.

The letter follows the Commissioner's visit to Hungary last October during which he held discussions with the Prime Minister, the Ministers of Foreign Affairs and of Justice and Law Enforcement as well as with other representatives of national authorities, international and non-governmental organisations.

In his letter, the Commissioner reiterates his grave concern about the observed rise of extremism, intolerance and racism which has targeted in particular Roma. He is also worried by the public use of anti-Roma, hate speech by certain public figures and by the lack of strong condemnation of and effective measures for preventing similar incidents. While welcoming some positive measures undertaken by the Hungarian government like those aimed at integrating Roma into the public sector, Commissioner Hammarberg stresses that such measures should be accompanied by activities to increase public awareness of the situation of national minorities and other communities which suffer from discrimination or intolerance, such as the Roma, the Jewish community and LGBT (lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender) people.

Finally, the Commissioner recommends the ratification by Hungary of Protocol N° 12 to the European Convention on Human Rights, containing a general prohibition of discrimination, and the acceptance of the collective complaints procedure under the European Social Charter.

Kosovo*: "Time is not right for returns", stresses Human Rights Commissioner (02.12.09)

The Council of Europe Commissioner for Human Rights, Thomas Hammarberg, expressed on 2 December his very deep concern at the forced returns to Kosovo of people who have found shelter in European states. "The time simply is not right for returns in general, let alone forced returns", said the Commissioner. Commissioner Hammarberg visited Kosovo last March and in July he made public a report on the human rights situation.

Commissioner Hammarberg in Georgia: detainees released (03.12.09)

Two detained teenagers were released on Wednesday after intervention by Thomas Hammarberg in Tskhinvali. Two other minors will be freed within the coming days according to a pledge given to the Commissioner. The boys had crossed the administrative borderline from Georgia in early November and were tried on charges of illegal entry carrying weapons. The Commissioner could also ensure the release of five older South Ossetians from the Georgian city of Gori.

"There are more cases on each side which must result in releases", said the Commissioner in a first comment. "There are also several cases of persons missing, the fate of whom must be seriously investigated - among them three young Ossetians who were photographed in captivity in October last year and have since disappeared. All such cases must now been clarified", said Thomas Hammarberg.

B. Thematic work

"Europe should embrace multiculturalism and avoid narrow definitions of national identities" says Commissioner Hammarberg (30.11.09)

"Europe is still not free from racism, xenophobia and discrimination. Minorities are made targets of hate speech, violence and systematic discrimination, not least in the job market", said Thomas Hammarberg, Council of Europe Commissioner for Human Rights, in his Viewpoint published on 30 November. He asked politicians to take such negative tendencies more seriously. "There is a need to analyse and address the very root causes of these human and political failures. Our ability to interact positively with one another will affect the future of Europe."
