Reasons for standing

The conference of INGOs plays a central role in the inclusion of civil society in policy making to promote Human Rights and democracy, and strengthen the social, educational and cultural bonds within Europe.

I see the conference as a laboratory of ideas where global challenges are serenely discussed away from partisan interests. In order to increase our impact and optimize our actions, I propose to remodel our commissions on the parliamentary assembly, improve our communication and consolidate our finances.

Following my background, I am convinced that I am ideally suited for the post of rapporteur. Working in research has given me good communication, organizational and managerial skills. My commitment for higher education has been developed through my mandates at my university and as vice-president of the Confederation of Junior Researchers where I worked on research policy.

Interested by European cooperation, I joined Eurodoc, a 32-country federation representing ±1 million early-career researchers, as treasurer. I elaborate our financial strategy, work on equality issues and represent my INGO with stakeholders including the European Commission and the conference of INGOs.

At the conference, following Eurodoc commitment, I always act for an open and equal society. Hence, last June, I supported the elaboration of a non-sexist charter and have been working on it with Mrs. Anne Nègre. Finally, I am looking forward to collaborate with our INGOs to shape our Europe of the future.
