	Is there a need for an explicit request for prolongation of the provisional arrest beyond the 18 days mentioned in Article 16, paragraph 4 of the European Convention on Extradition (ETS No.24)?	No
Extradition procedures: Please describe shortly the different types of procedure (e.g. normal, simplified, other) indicating the main differences:	Each type of the extradition procedure is triggered by apprehension of the person concerned by the extradition, or by requesting the necessary information. In case this preliminary investigation of the extradition procedure is initiated without an extradition request being received, the public prosecutor will immediately ask the Ministry of Justice to notify the competent foreign authority about the initiation of preliminary investigation and invite it to send a request for extradition. In the formal extradition procedure, in case the public prosecutor terminates the preliminary investigation by filling a petition, the court decides upon that petition whether the extradition is admissible. The final consent to the admissibility of the extradition must be expressed by the Minister of Justice. If a person sought expresses before the court his/her consent to be extradited, after being advised by the judge about the nature of the simplified extradition and consequences of his/her consent, no formal

	proceedings is required. The judge only decides on taking the person into extradition custody or on conversion of preliminary custody into extradition custody. Under simplified procedure the rule of speciality does not apply and the competent foreign authority is not required to submit the original of the request for the extradition.
Detention before and after the receipt of the extradition request, (deadlines, conditional release, etc.):	If the ascertained matters of fact substantiate a concern that the person might flee, the judge may decide on taking the person into preliminary custody before the receipt of the extradition as well as after the receipt of that request. Unless stipulated by the European Convention on Extradition, Additional Protocols thereto or a bilateral treaty, the person concerned have to be released, if the request for extradition of a foreign state was not delivered to the Ministry of Justice within 40 days following the day of imposing the preliminary custody; this does not apply in case of simplified extradition. After the Minister of Justice decides to authorize extradition and in case of simplified extradition, the judge decides on taking the person into extradition custody or on conversion of preliminary custody into extradition custody. The extradition custody may not last longer than 3 months. The person must be released from extradition custody on the last day of this time period at the latest. In case the extradition could not be realized due to unforeseeable circumstances, that time limit can be extended up to 3 months. The total duration of extradition custody may not exceed 6 months.
Statutes of limitation for the purpose of prosecution and for the execution of sentences (general principles):	Period of limitation depends on sentence that might be imposed or was imposed. The most serious criminal offences are not subject to the statute of limitations. Relevant provisions are § 34 - § 35 and § 94 - § 95 of the Czech Criminal Code.
Provisions concerning extradition of nationals:	Extradition of nationals is prohibited. However, there are three exceptions to this rule: a) extradition under the

	European Arrest Warrant, b) surrender of a person to the International Criminal Court, and c) the person consents with his/her extradition.
Surrender (eg. deadlines):	The surrender should take place within 3 months since the decision of the judge on extradition custody.
Other particularly relevant information (such as, specific requirements concerning double criminality):	Specific rules concerning the double criminality apply in case of the European Arrest Warrant.
