Introduction

1. Background

The European Language Portfolio (ELP) and the Common European Framework of Reference for Languages (CEFR) have been closely related in both development and implementation since their inception as parallel proposals at the Rüşchlikon Symposium in 1991. One key feature of this relationship has been the inclusion of self-assessment checklists of action-oriented 'Can Do' statements in the language biography section of the ELP, according to the ELP Principles and Guidelines set out in 2000 by the Education Committee of the Council of Europe. These checklists describe contextually relevant competences benchmarked to the CEFR Common Scale, drawing on the same core principles of positive formulation and stand-alone integrity demonstrated by the CEFR bank of illustrative descriptors.

The pilot ELP projects conducted in 15 Council of Europe member states between 1998 and 2000 pre-dated the publication of the CEFR in 2001, and from 2000 the ELP Validation Committee was set up to establish conformity of draft ELPs to the ELP Principles and Guidelines. This process facilitated the accreditation of ELPs across numerous member states and educational contexts, including ELPs containing descriptor checklists aimed at specific young learner age groups not explicitly represented by the CEFR bank of illustrative descriptors. Following the replacement of the validation process with online registration in 2011, detailed instructions are provided on the ELP website, offering (among other resources) generic self-assessment checklists as a template for learners aged 15+. A paper is also available considering the issues involved in producing self-assessment descriptors suitable for use by young learners, entitled 'ELP Checklists for Young Learners'.

Thus educators developing new young learner-oriented descriptors for ELPs self-assessment checklists and for definition of language syllabus objectives may consult these resources along with a range of sample accredited ELPs made available for download from the website. However, there is not yet in existence a set of CEFR illustrative descriptors for young learners that has been developed with the same methodology of empirical calibration applied to the CEFR adult illustrative descriptors, a process which is described in Appendix B of the CEFR.

During 2014/2015 work was undertaken to extend the existing 2001 set of illustrative descriptors contained in the CEFR. This extension incorporated relevant descriptors from an existing pool of further calibrated material provided by a variety of sources, to better address the illustration of A1, of the C-levels and of reception at all levels. In parallel, three further projects concentrated on areas under-represented in the original set of CEFR illustrative descriptors:

- i. (2014) Collation of descriptors for young learners from existing validated sources, in relation to CEFR illustrative descriptors.
- ii. (2014-15) Development of descriptors in line with an expanded concept of Mediation. These descriptors are grouped under the headings: Cognitive mediation, Relational mediation and Mediation strategies.
- iii. (2015-16) Development of new scales in the areas of online interaction, response to text, plurilingual competence, pluricultural competence, reception strategies and phonological competence, for inclusion with the new mediation descriptors in the extended set of CEFR illustrative descriptors.

Significantly the project did not undertake the development of a new set of calibrated descriptors of language competences for young learners to add to the extended set of CEFR illustrative descriptors. This was for the following reasons:

- i. The CEFR illustrative descriptors have been developed, validated and calibrated irrespective of specified age groups, whereas descriptors of language competence for young learners represent selective adaptations of the existing CEFR illustrative descriptors and scales, and only where relevant to a given age group and context.
- ii. A first step in addressing this area should therefore be to identify to what extent the available set of calibrated CEFR illustrative descriptors are relevant for young learner age groups, either in their original form or by reasonable adaptation for context.
- iii. This should be based on real contextual practice with young learners, hence the decision to gather a representative sample from existing validated ELPs and assessment descriptors developed by language professionals across member states.
- iv. As this work was scheduled prior to / parallel to the development and validation of the extended set of CEFR illustrative descriptors, it would not have been logical to attempt a large scale project to adapt all of the relevant CEFR illustrative descriptors multiple times for different age groups of young learners, before the main 'extended set' was even completed and published.
- v. The age groups indicated by this collation should be considered a road map for reflection rather than a comprehensive definitive scheme. For example, descriptors for pre-primary ages up to 6 years were not included due to scarcity of useable validated sources, but such work could be undertaken in the future.

Therefore in summary the objective of this document is to provide an overview of how existing validated descriptors of language competence for young learners relate in content and focus to the calibrated CEFR illustrative descriptors, as a first step towards the possible future development and/or calibration of young learner illustrative descriptors.

2. Rationale for the collation of descriptors taken from European Language Portfolios for Young Learners

The rationale for this collation acknowledges the following key considerations:

- i. The need for sharing of experience and transfer of knowhow between Council of Europe member states, regarding numerous parallel implementations of the European Language Portfolio for young learners since 2001.

It is important to acknowledge that such exchange of knowhow exists already across many contexts and domains, and the pool of written information in this area extends well beyond ELPs themselves to include user manuals, training programmes, learning and testing materials, questionnaires, reports and studies, dissertations and press releases (Schärer, 2012). A very wide range of ELPs have been developed since the validation of ELPs ended in 2010, and the collection of publicly available samples is so broad now that registration of new ELPs on the Council of Europe website also stopped in 2014 (for more information see www.coe.int/portfolio). This project has not set out to be a comprehensive compilation, but rather a selective and illustrative collation.

- ii. An acknowledgement of the basis of ELP ‘Can Do’ statements in the CEFR illustrative scales, which should therefore be used as the organising principle for the collation and sharing of descriptors of language competences specific for young learners taken from ELP models.

Given the challenge felt by many educators in relating ELP ‘Can Do’ descriptors for self-assessment to the outcomes of official examinations (Little, 2012), this collation can serve as a review of the possible links between typical ELP checklists for young learners and the calibrated illustrative scales, which form the basis of language examination benchmarking to the CEFR.

- iii. The consideration of how descriptors in ELPs for young learners may (or may not) be relevant to the development of competences described in the extended set of CEFR illustrative scales, as a feature of life-long learning pathways.

Two main solutions have traditionally been applied to address the length of time it can often take for language learners in schools to progress from one CEFR level to the next: subdividing CEFR levels and/or developing part of a curriculum within one level (see <http://www.coe.int/en/web/portfolio/the-language-biography> , ‘ELP checklists for Young Learners’). An important consideration for either solution is to what extent young learner ELP descriptors for different age groups clearly address the same area of competence in an age-appropriate way, or conversely the extent to which the level of cognitive challenge implied by a calibrated illustrative descriptor is appropriate or not for a given age group.

The illustrative collation provided here aims to better inform evaluation of these issues by allowing direct comparison of young learner ELP descriptor samples for primary and post-primary age groups, placed in parallel with the extended set of CEFR illustrative descriptors. In addition, (non-prescriptive) recommendations are given regarding the likely relevance of each CEFR descriptor to these age groups.

ELP descriptors have not been mapped to the new scales added to the extended set of CEFR illustrative descriptors, as this should be regarded as a possible future phase conducted in collaboration with practitioners with access to the new scales. Therefore these scales (entered in blue font) only have recommendations as to relevance for age groups.

- iv. In the absence of a calibrated bank of CEFR illustrative descriptors for young learners, such a collation can provide a useful reference document for educators developing objectives for language learning curricula for young learners in the age groups described.

Though it can never be fully comprehensive, the project brings together a representative selection of young learner ELP samples from a range of Council of Europe member states, using in particular materials drawn from accredited models in the Council of Europe ELP bank and/or samples registered on the Council of Europe website, along with young learner assessment descriptors supplied by Cambridge English Language Assessment and LinguaLevel (see a complete list of sources in section 4). The organisation of mapped descriptors into two broad age groups reflects the general age emphasis of the ELPs themselves (see section 3 of this introduction for an explanation of this), and also permits the user to identify areas of competence in the extended set of CEFR illustrative descriptors that have not yet been elaborated into young learner ELP descriptors, but feasibly could be.

3. Scope and structure of the collated set of descriptors for young learners taken from ELPs

3.1 Objectives of the document

With reference to the rationale given above, this collation serves the following functions:

- i. Provision of a representative range of sample descriptors that may be drawn upon and adapted to context, with clear benchmarking to the CEFR reference levels by means of qualitative correspondence to the calibrated adult illustrative descriptors.
- ii. A 'heat map' of existing young learner portfolio descriptors that have such correspondence to the CEFR illustrative descriptors.
- iii. A qualitative evaluation of the relevance of each of the descriptors of the extended set to the broad age groups represented by the collated ELPs.
- iv. Through this evaluation, indication of the extent to which the extended CEFR illustrative descriptors are relevant to young learners, many of which may be under-represented in existing portfolio examples and could be newly adapted.
- v. A road map for educators to identify competences in the CEFR illustrative descriptors that may inform young learner syllabus learning objectives, as a consideration for life-long learning pathways.

This collation is presented in 3 ways:

- i. Archive reference table (in current document), organised into columns for:
  - the extended set of CEFR descriptors organised by scale
  - their suggested relevance (or not) to primary and post-primary young learner age groups
  - examples of young learner ELP descriptors for both age groups showing a clear correspondence to a given CEFR descriptor.
- ii. Relevant descriptors for the 'primary' age group (ages 7-10): a table organised into columns for:
  - the extended set of CEFR descriptors organised by level
  - their suggested relevance to the 7-10 age group (non-relevant descriptors omitted)
  - examples of young learner ELP descriptors for the 7-10 age group showing a clear correspondence to relevant CEFR descriptors.
- iii. Relevant descriptors for the 'post-primary' age group (ages 11-15): a table organised into columns for:
  - the extended set of CEFR descriptors organised by level
  - their suggested relevance to the 11-15 age group (non-relevant descriptors omitted)
  - examples of young learner ELP descriptors for the 11-15 age group showing a clear correspondence to relevant CEFR descriptors.

3.2 Selection of sources

The selection of ELP samples and other sources can be viewed in full in section 4, providing an abbreviated code used to identify the source against each descriptor in the document.

The process of selection balanced the following objectives:

- i. An emphasis on accredited and validated models: several of the sources were therefore taken from 'A bank of descriptors for self-assessment in European Language Portfolios' (2004), and supplemented with a range accredited models spanning the period of Council of Europe validation from 2001 to 2010.
- ii. A healthy sample size: it became clear during the collation process that the majority of accredited young learner portfolio samples covered age ranges between 6 and 15 years old. Therefore, although Cambridge English Language Assessment descriptors and some ELP descriptors were available targeting age ranges below 6 years old, it was not practical for this collation to include them, as there would have been too many gaps in the mapping to CEFR descriptors.
- iii. A healthy geographic mix: A conscious effort was made to include ELP samples from a range of geographic contexts, and to avoid a possible dominance of ELPs written in English. However, it was not feasible to include ELP descriptors written in the languages of all Council of Europe member states.

3.3 Organisation by age group

The descriptors are organised into two broad age groups: 7-10 and 11-15. This was based on the following conclusions:

- i. The majority of samples followed the age grouping pattern of 'primary' and 'post-primary' education. Although the age thresholds for primary and secondary school ELPs differed across samples, there were insufficient samples specifically spanning the age range between 9 and 12 to create a 'middle' category. The table below illustrates the age coverage of the majority of ELPs samples collected:

- ii. Given the key consideration of 'level of cognitive challenge' in evaluating relevance of CEFR illustrative descriptors to age groups, it was important to acknowledge, even if only in a broad sense, established insights from the field of cognitive developmental psychology. The age categories suggested by the collation were seen to roughly correspond with the age thresholds of around 7 and 11 years indicated by Jean Piaget's theory of cognitive development for the 'concrete operational' and 'formal operational' stages respectively (Schaffer & Kipp, 2013).

- iii. 7 years was chosen as the lower threshold of the 'primary' group, not to exclude 6 year old learners from this group, but to acknowledge a threshold in the judgements of relevance that can apply to the majority of primary education systems.
- iv. 15 years was chosen as the cut-off for the older age group, given that a high proportion of sampled ELPs for secondary were used for ages up to 15, and also given that ELPs intended for ages above 15 tended to be indistinguishable in content from ELPs for adults.

3.4 Issues and responses

This collation makes reference to the extended set of CEFR descriptors developed and validated between 2014 and 2016, including completely new sections such as that for mediation competences and strategies. During the course of this related project, a great amount of feedback was given by participants in the validation activities and during the wider consultation meetings. The mapping of portfolio and assessment descriptors for young learners happened prior to this work, and was therefore revisited in 2016 with updates and further evaluations of relevance of newly validated descriptors to the specified age groups, in order to reflect all of the updates to the CEFR illustrative scales. This section focuses on the following points in parallel:

(i) the most relevant issues which were raised over the duration of the project extending the CEFR illustrative descriptors, and how each issue was addressed in that project.

(ii) key issues related to (i) that are specific to the young learner descriptor mapping process, over and above the points already dealt with in the rationale.

Relationship of mediation scales to existing CEFR scales: Some aspects of mediation, in the broader interpretation now being adopted, are already present in the original illustrative descriptor scales. This is discussed in the introduction to the CEFR extended set of illustrative descriptors with examples provided, acknowledging the inevitability of fuzzy boundaries in any such scheme of categorisation.

Cross-linguistic mediation: The introduction to the CEFR extended set of illustrative descriptors explains in some detail the complex problem of developing workable descriptors that explicitly define the roles of more than one language in cross-linguistic mediation. The project group decided to take the line that, as with the original illustrative descriptors, what is calibrated is the perceived difficulty of the functional language ability – irrespective of whatever languages are involved. It is recommended that those languages should be specified by the user as part of the adaptation for practical use.

Given that this area is a new addition to the CEFR illustrative scales, there are no existing young learner portfolio descriptors exemplifying such adaptation to context. However, as with all the illustrative scales, comments are included as to the perceived relevance of these new descriptors to the stated age ranges for developing new portfolio descriptors.

Individual differences: In any CEFR descriptor scale, the descriptors at a particular level define what can reasonably be achieved when the user/learner has a communicative language competence (CEFR Section 5.2) in the language(s) concerned corresponding to the CEFR level given, provided that the person concerned also has the personal characteristics, knowledge, cognitive maturity and experience – that is to say the general competences (CEFR Section 5.1) – necessary to do so successfully. The CEFR scales are intended to be used to profile ability. It is unlikely that all users who are globally ‘B1’ are capable of doing exactly what is defined at B1 on all CEFR descriptor scales, no more and no less. It is far more likely that people whose overall level is at B1 will in fact be A2 or A2+ in relation to some activities and B1+ or even B2 in relation to others, depending upon their personal profile of general competences, in turn dependent on age, experience etc. Further discussion of this point can be found in the introduction to the CEFR extended set of illustrative descriptors with respect to plurilingual and pluricultural competences.

The consideration of personal characteristics is particularly important for young learners, where judgements of the relevance of CEFR illustrative descriptors for adaptation to the age ranges 7-10 and 11-15 should acknowledge the extent of potential individual differences in cognitive and social development within each group. Therefore where comments are entered about the positive relevance or partial relevance of a descriptor to a given age range, this is based on the perception of what is reasonable / possible rather than ‘expected’ or ‘necessary’ in terms of cognitive and/or social development. In this way the documentation provides a roadmap of options for educators, with exemplars mapped from a selection of existing portfolio and assessment sources. While the relevant contents of the CEFR illustrative scales are thus narrowed down for the consideration of each age group, the result is not intended as a ready-made curriculum.

Literacy: Related to the point above, it should be acknowledged that levels of development of literacy can vary considerably for the age ranges given, not only due to individual differences, but according to national, social and educational context. The treatment of descriptors relating to written reception, production and integrated skills therefore takes a ‘bias for best’ approach, assuming what is reasonable / possible for the age range given optimum literacy support.

Level in relation to integrated skills: All of the descriptors in the categories under conveying received information involve integrated skills, a mixture of reception, production and in some cases interaction. The focus is not on reception, for which CEFR scales already exist. The level at which descriptors are calibrated reflects the expert judgment of the working groups and the hundreds of informants as to the level of the processing and the production required.

Level in relation to integrated languages: As stated above users are advised to specify the precise languages involved in cross-linguistic mediation, as part of the adaptation of the descriptor for practical use. When the reception and the production or interaction are in different languages, then, as stated in the previous point, the level is that of the processing and the production required. One needs to be able to process and articulate the source message in the target language(s).

Languages and level in the two scales on plurilingualism: Ability in plurilingual comprehension usually involves activities like exploiting one’s receptive ability in one language (however partial) to deduce the meaning of texts in another language. Again it is the minimum functional level needed in each of the languages concerned to perform these activities that the descriptor scaling refers to. Proximity of languages naturally helps. Therefore, again, in any specific context, users are advised to specify the languages concerned as part of the adaptation of the descriptor for practical use.

In Exploiting plurilingual repertoire, the level given is that of the weaker language in the combination, and users are advised to specify the languages concerned as part of the adaptation of the descriptor for practical use.

Languages used in sample young learner portfolio descriptors: As this project is a collation of the contributions of language professionals working directly with young learners, no attempt has been made in the documentation to translate portfolio descriptors written in languages other than English, despite the CEFR illustrative descriptors being presented in English and French. This is because the aim of the project is to present a representative selection of available evidence, rather than adapt it, and there is no bias intended towards English or French as target languages for young learner language teaching and learning.

Organisation of the cross-referenced tables: The original mapping of sample young learner portfolio and assessment descriptors was completed in a table showing each CEFR illustrative scale in full, and both age groups side by side, becoming an 'archive' reference document (see section 3.5 for a visualisation). It was found however that this would be very cumbersome for educators to work with, who are usually concerned with developing syllabi and/or portfolios at a given CEFR band for a given age range. Therefore two further documents were produced for each age range separately, grouping the information mapped to CEFR illustrative descriptors by each broad CEFR band (e.g. Pre-A1 to A1, A2 to A2+ etc.). Given that this effectively broke up the scales, there was no real reason to comparatively display non-relevant descriptors or indicate levels for which there is no CEFR illustrative descriptor available, as this would have created excessive redundancy in documents that were intended to be streamlined for practical use. Therefore all such entries were removed, leaving only those with positive or partial relevance at each level. This does mean that for several sections at the 'B' and 'C' levels the 'overall' descriptors are not displayed, as they encompass a degree of cognitive and social maturity that was not judged relevant to the age group. These descriptors can nevertheless be viewed in the 'archive' document.

Very limited relevance of the 'C' levels to the 7-10 age group: It is not assumed that there is a 'glass ceiling' for learners aged 7-10 in terms of language acquisition, but the majority of descriptors for the C1 and C2 levels were found to imply a degree of cognitive and social maturity that has little or no relevance to the communicative needs of this age range. For this reason the C2 level is not addressed at all in the streamlined document for ages 7-10 organised by level. In addition, only a very limited number of C1 descriptors are referenced for this age range, which relate to receptive communicative language activities and linguistic / sociolinguistic communicative language competences only.

Statements of partial relevance to an age range: In many cases CEFR illustrative descriptors are evaluated as partially relevant for adaptation to the stated age range, given age appropriate tasks. This does not guarantee that user adaptations of these descriptors for young learners will represent the same level of challenge, or indeed retain level calibration, but rather indicates the feasibility of working towards the descriptor calibrated at that CEFR level, as a feature of lifelong learning.

3.5 Organisation of the 'archive' table

Overview: The collated table of descriptors for both age groups serves as an archive reference document SEPARATE TO THIS DOCUMENT, and contains the following components:

Columns indicating perceived relevance of the CEFR descriptors to adaptation for the two broad age groups.

Columns containing the collated ELP / validated descriptors that correspond to the CEFR extended set of illustrative descriptors, with cells left blank where there is no evident correspondence. Each ELP descriptor mapped to the original ELP source and original stated level, though the level allocated by row may have been re-interpreted in the mapping process.

These are explained below with the relevant headings highlighted in each case.

CEFR Descriptor (2016 Extended Set)	Relevance for adaptation to ages 7-10	Relevance for adaptation to ages 11-15	Accredited / registered ELP can-do statements 7-10	Accredited / registered ELP can-do statements 11-15
-------------------------------------	---------------------------------------	--	---	--

The left hand column is organised according the scales included in the 2016 CEFR extended set of illustrative descriptors

CEFR Descriptor (2016 Extended Set)	Relevance for adaptation to ages 7-10	Relevance for adaptation to ages 11-15	Accredited / registered ELP can-do statements 7-10	Accredited / registered ELP can-do statements 11-15
-------------------------------------	---------------------------------------	--	---	--

Columns 2 and 3 contain subjective inferences validated through consultation of a small group of language education experts. Therefore it can only be interpreted as a general guide that is open to interpretation / re-interpretation according to specific contexts.

The following statements were used, with further comments where necessary:

Relevant

A CEFR descriptor is evaluated as 'relevant' where it can be feasibly elaborated as a learning outcome for the age group indicated. Examples may be given to illustrate how the scope of corresponding tasks may be adjusted for the context without significantly affecting the language difficulty level of the descriptor.

Partially relevant

A CEFR descriptor is evaluated as 'partially relevant' where the elaboration into an age-appropriate context is possible, but it either limits the nature of tasks indicated by the descriptor, or can only feasibly apply to an upper range of the age group indicated. In each case a comment is added to provide examples and/or make this clear.

Not relevant - too challenging (either cognitively or socially)

A CEFR descriptor is evaluated as 'not relevant - too challenging (either cognitively or socially)' where it was not considered feasible as a learning outcome for young learners in the age range indicated, even with age-appropriate tasks.

CEFR Descriptor (2016 Extended Set)	Relevance for adaptation to ages 7-10	Relevance for adaptation to ages 11-15	Accredited / registered ELP can-do statements 7-10	Accredited / registered ELP can-do statements 11-15

These columns list the sample descriptors for young learners themselves. No limit was placed on the number of ELP descriptors that could be mapped to a single CEFR illustrative descriptor. Consequently some cells have several descriptors entered, some have none. Each ELP descriptor includes the code for its source in brackets.

3.6 Organisation of the tables of relevant descriptors for each age group

The same data contained in the archive reference table is presented in separate documents for each of the age groups 7-10 and 11-15, organised for easier reference with educators in mind. For this reason all rows have been removed where there is either no CEFR illustrative descriptor available, or the descriptor has been evaluated as having no relevance to the age range. This is to avoid excessive redundancy in the tables for each age range, given that they do not present complete scales. However, the main 'archive' document organised by scale can always be referenced to view judgements of non-relevance.

Column indicating perceived relevance of the CEFR descriptors to adaptation for the age group indicated

Column containing the collated ELP / validated descriptors for the given age group that correspond to the CEFR extended set of illustrative descriptors, with cells left blank where there is no evident correspondence. Each young learner descriptor mapped is referenced to the original source and original stated level, though the level allocated by row may have been re-interpreted in the mapping process.

Left hand column containing the CEFR extended set of illustrative descriptors, with sections collating descriptors for each CEFR level and rows for each CEFR scale, including 'plus levels', pre-A1, and new scales as features of the extended set.

Notes:

- The bank incorporates 10 sources for the younger age group (guideline: age 7-10) and 9 for the older one (guideline: age 11-15) and sources developed in several different contexts in altogether 13 countries (NB: the ELP that appears under 'Austria' was actually developed for the Central European Region, together with organisations from three neighbouring countries: Slovakia, the Czech Republic and Hungary).
- All descriptors have been used at the same level as in the original source, unless otherwise stated (with levels A2.2/B1.2/B2.2 – where used in the original source – added as A2+/B1+/B2+).
- Although the 'Young Learners' and 'for Schools' Cambridge English examinations are specifically designed for school-aged learners, the age groups given in the list above are offered by Cambridge English Language Assessment more as guidelines, as there is no actual age limit on the exams.
- "ND" (for descriptors from the CoE bank): shows that the descriptor in the bank was not linked to a specific CEFR descriptor (but was used at the given level, unless otherwise stated).
- "NL": no level given in the original source.
