

Mr Thomas Ahlstrand is a Swedish national. He is the Deputy Chief Prosecutor at the National Public Prosecution Department in Gothenburg where he works as a prosecutor (in the Swedish criminal procedure equivalent to and combining the duties of a prosecutor and an investigating judge) in cases against organised crime, mainly with international elements.

Trained as a lawyer with a Master of Law degree, he has been a public prosecutor for about 30 years, apart from spells as a Court of Appeals judge and solicitor in private practice. For the last 15 years, he has been specialising in cases concerning trafficking in human beings, especially for sexual purposes.

Mr Ahlstrand has lectured on the subject in different international and national conferences. He has administered and led a judicial survey of all Swedish court decisions of cases of trafficking in human beings in 2009-2012. He has published a number of opinion pieces, many on the subject of trafficking in human beings, in several major Swedish journals.
