How to attract and involve parents in drug prevention? How to reach and engage them more effectively in different contexts (community programmes, municipal level, criminal justice settings, etc.) and what are approaches and good practices of states to involve them in drug prevention? What specific programmes can be designed for parents that contribute to the wider goal of prevention?

The objective of the side event will be to explore good practices from Georgia, Italy and Poland and discuss their approaches, available programmes for parents as well as their effectiveness. It also aims to underline the role and involvement of parents in drug prevention and encourage countries to strengthen support for parents through evidence-based interventions. In addition, the Pompidou Group's upcoming work focusing on the role of fathers who use substances will be highlighted.
