

Statement of interpretation on Article 19§8

The Committee is of the opinion that, in order to fulfil its obligations under this paragraph, a state must not only have laws excluding, in principle, any possibility of expelling workers who are legally resident in its territory – unless they endanger national security or offend against public order or morality – but must, in addition, provide suitable guarantees against the possibility of arbitrary decisions in this matter.