My motivation to get vice president

I have been interested in European politics since the beginning of my political career. Over time I became increasingly aware of how much Switzerland is influenced by Europe and how much the wellbeing of our country, our regions and the communities - ultimately our society - depends directly on what is happening in and around Europe. This understanding should lead every politician to deal constructively with Europe. In particular, the focus topics of democracy, compliance with human rights and the rule of law are very important to me. That is the reason why I like to take an active part in the political life of the Council of Europe and why I am ready to take over the vice presidency.

I am convinced that Switzerland, as a direct democracy, can positively support the work and success of the congress. At the same time, contacts with authorities in other countries, regions and municipalities enable international exchange, thinking outside the box, comparing and, if necessary, adapting individual projects and ideas.

I look forward to interesting topics and discussions in the Commission of des questions d'actualité, to the internationality in Strasbourg and to many exciting contacts.
