

Yuji Z. Hashimoto is currently a PhD student in Criminology and a graduate assistant at the criminology unit of the School of Criminal Sciences of the University of Lausanne, Switzerland. He graduated with a Master of Law in Criminology and Security in 2017 at the University of Lausanne with a master thesis on the relationship between specific types of infrastructure and burglary rates at the municipal level. He also graduated with a Master of Science in Psychology in 2018 at the same university, with a master thesis about the social psychological determinants of whistleblowing intentions. His research interests are comparative criminology and the macro-level determinants of long-term trends in crime. Since 2018 he collaborates with Prof. Dr. Marcelo F. Aebi on the SPACE II project (Persons under the supervision of Probation Agencies) and on the LINC project which aims to link SPACE statistics with the European Sourcebook statistics.
