Aim and objectives of the training course

This training course aims to celebrate the 75th anniversary of the Council of Europe and demonstrate its relevance for young people in UK today by :

1. Promoting human rights among young people (18 – 35) living in Brent and the wider UK and exploring ways young people can use both offline and online tools to exercise and defend democratic rights and use them to engage and influence political decisions related to Human Rights (HR) and Human Rights Education (HRE).
2. Empowering youth workers and actors working with youth, and in particular young migrants, refugees, and asylum seekers, with tools and methodologies on HRE to support participants in implementing concrete actions through their organisations and new projects and positively influencing local authorities on the importance of HRE.

Objectives:

- To strengthen participants' understanding of key concepts of human rights and human rights education and their ability to apply them into with young people in a diverse society, including relevant mechanisms and instruments (charters, declarations, conventions).
- To develop essential competences to act as multipliers and advocates working with HRE in non-formal learning settings, including familiarising participants with the approaches of the Compass manual.

- To raise awareness about the online and offline forms of phobias related to the existing standards and legislation giving concrete tools that can be used by local organisations to promote HR and intercultural dialogue.
- To develop competences to protect and promote cultural, social economical rights.
