A. Description of the expected deliverables/services

I. Background

Following discussions with the COMEX (Committee of Experts of the ECRML) and with external partners, it has been considered necessary by all stakeholders concerned to develop a new web application (REMILAN) with a view to assisting the COMEX and the Secretariat to perform their work with greater efficiency.

This application will facilitate access to the information provided in COMEX Evaluation Reports and CM Recommendations and allow all stakeholders to have tailor-made reports based on the conclusions adopted by the COMEX in its reports and by the CM in its Recommendations and make it possible to write, modify, review and follow up all the information relating to the Evaluation Reports and Recommendations, leading to a saving in the time needed to perform these tasks.

The ultimate goal of the web application system is the automatic drafting of the evaluation reports, thus providing the COMEX and the Secretariat with the necessary tool to efficiently draft the Evaluation Reports. In this respect, and following the conclusions of the COMEX Working Group on the reforms of the Evaluation Reports, changes have already been introduced to the format of the reports with a view to linking it to the new requirements of the web application system. The Provider shall take into account possible future developments and additions to the capability of the application and shall not do anything which may prejudice the development of future capacities.

In that context, the Council of Europe is seeking expertise for provision of two phases of ICT development services. This contract shall cover the first phase, and the Council will have the optional right to request performance of the second phase.

Phase two shall be commenced only upon exercise by the Council of its option. There is no obligation on the Council to exercise this option.
