Diktatur der Daten? – Privatsphäre und Selbstbestimmung im Zeitalter von Big Data und Algorithmen

Die am 25. Mai 2016 in Kraft getretene Europäische Datenschutz-Grundverordnung (EU-DS-GVO) legt fest, dass niemand sich einer Entscheidung unterwerfen muss, die ausschließlich auf einer automatisierten Verarbeitung beruht. Die technischen Entwicklungen im Bereich von Big Data, künstlicher Intelligenz und Algorithmen werfen die Frage auf, ob diese Bestimmung in der Praxis umsetzbar sein wird. Schön heute treffen Algorithmen Entscheidungen, die vom Menschen kaum noch beeinflussbar sind, etwa wenn es um die schnelle Analyse großer Datenmengen oder die Vorhersage des Verhaltens von Menschen geht. Beherrschen wir diese Algorithmen noch oder droht uns die Automatisierung der Gesellschaft durch Big Data und Algorithmen?

Les responsables de traitement répondent-ils favorablement à ce droit ? L'AFCDP, dès 2010 s'est intéressée à cette question. Chaque année, au même titre que l'organisation de l'Université des CIL , l'association publie sur son site internet un index sur le droit d'accès. Basé sur les recherches et travaux des étudiants du Master spécialisé « Management et Protection des données à caractère personnel » dispensé par l'ISEP, cet index dénote des résultats stables mais parlants depuis quelques années. Ainsi par exemple, apprend-t-on, que 37,4% des organismes sollicités ont donné une réponse conforme au droit, dans le délai du respect de deux mois. Quels seront les résultats pour l'année 2016 ? Dans l'attente de leur divulgation, vous pouvez consulter, notamment, les résultats de l'année 2015 : https://www.afcdp.net/Index-ACDP-2015-du-Droit-d-acces On the occasion of Data Privacy Day, the French Data Privacy Officer Association (AFCDP) publishes its Index of the right of access every year in partnership with the Paris High School ISEP. The answers that can be expected have steadily improved: 41% of organizations solicited have made a reply complying with the law. What will be the results for 2016? Conférence-débat portant sur "La protection des données dans l'Union européenne depuis les révélations Snowden"

La conférence s'articulera en trois axes.

Le premier s'attachera à dresser un état des lieux de la situation législative et jurisprudentielle de la protection des données au sein de l'Union européenne. Pour ce faire, un assistant parlementaire du groupe des Verts-ALE ainsi que l'activiste et juriste Max Schrems interviendront.

Le deuxième point abordé sera la question de la relation entre sécurité et vie privée, cette dernière peut-elle subsister face à l'autre ? Afin de tenter de répondre à cette question le professeur Jeandeboz (Université Libre de Bruxelles) s'exprimera à propos de la collecte des données aux frontières et de sa répercussion sur la liberté de circulation ainsi que sur la vie privée, puis, Lucie Krahulcova, membre d'« Access Now », fera une étude de cas portant sur l'Investigatory Powers Act.

La troisième partie de la conférence sera dédiée à une approche concrète adressée à une société civile consciente, responsable et active. Ainsi, maître Goblet présentera les moyens juridiques permettant de protéger sa vie privée et ses données personnelles et Madame Artiguelong, membre du bureau exécutif de l'AEDH, présentera des réflexes simples à adopter dans l'utilisation d'internet.

L'AEDH souhaite profiter de cette 11^e édition de la Journée internationale de la Protection des Données pour sensibiliser, entre autres, les étudiants. L'idée est de susciter une prise de conscience quant à ce que représentent les données personnelles et de montrer qu'il est possible.

EUROPEAN DATA PROTECTION SUPERVISOR (EDPS)

Country & Institution / Pays et institution : European Union - European Data Protection Supervisor (EDPS)

Planned activity(ies) / Activité(s) envisagée(s) : Participation to the CPDP Conference

1) Digital Rights And Enforcement by the EDPS

Chair Giovanni Buttarelli, EDPS (EU)
Moderator Orla Lynskey, LSE (UK)

Panel Christian Bongard, German Competition Authority (DE), Angela Daly, Queensland University of Technology (AU), Willem Debeuckelaere, Belgian Privacy Commission (BE), Ana Gomes, MEP (PT), Finn Myrstad, Norwegian Consumer Council (NO)

The EU Digital Single Market strategy seeks to exploit potential benefits of big data and machine learning. However, infusing these technologies with values and rights set out in the Lisbon Treaty and the Charter of Fundamental Rights has proved to be challenging. Different regulators in the areas of data protection, consumer law and antitrust as well as sectoral bodies driven by the shared objective – the protection of fundamental rights – have been supervising compliance of new technologies. But they tend to work in silos, despite the obvious issues (e.g., unfair privacy terms imposed for web-based services). To aid this situation, the EDPS facilitates a Digital Clearing House bringing together regulators from different jurisdictions at national and supranational level, offering a chance to exchange information and determine the best means of tackling abuse and potential threats to the rights and interests of individuals in the online environment. This panel will consider the following questions:

What should be the priorities for this network?

Which cases in the fields of competition, consumer, data protection and others require more dialogue and cooperation across jurisdictional boundaries?

Should it be possible for regulatory authorities in one jurisdiction to require remedies which address the concerns of other authorities?

How might this be achieved while respecting the independence of regulators and the confidentiality of investigations?

2) Side event “Ethics in the Digital Era” and cocktail by the EDPS and Mozilla

Welcome Giovanni Buttarelli, EDPS (EU)
Moderator Raegan Mc Donald, Mozilla (BE)

Speakers Peter Burgess, Ecole Normale Supérieure (FR), Luciano Floridi, Oxford University (UK), Aurélie Pols, Mind Your Privacy (SP), Antoinette Rouvroy, Université de Namur (BE), Jeroen vanden Hoven, Delft University (NL)

The advent of the digital era has shown the increasing importance of the rights to privacy and data protection. Good data protection law and effective enforcement are necessary in our digital society. However, the exponential possibilities of digital technologies have challenged the principles of both rights and have highlighted their limitations. Compliance with the law and data protection principles is important but it's also important to explore what goes beyond them. The EDPS has initiated an international debate on the ethical dimension of data protection in the digital era. Developing an ethical dimension of data protection is one the EDPS' priorities for its 2015-2019 mandate. To contribute to and nurture the debate, an independent group of experts, the Ethics Advisory Group (EAG) has been established at the EDPS. The group of six eminent persons, each an expert in their respective field (philosophy, computer science, data analysis, law), will consider digital ethics from a variety of academic and practical perspectives for a mandate of 2 years. The EAG will publish its first Interim Report at the beginning of 2017 and a final report in 2018. At this side event, the members of the EAG will share the state of play of their deliberations.

Ethical uncertainties in privacy and data protection arising from new data processing and surveillance technologies need to be nuanced; New ethical responsibilities emerging as a result of these developments need to be identified and clarified; Ethical analysis is needed that encourages a long-term approach to technological innovation; Well-grounded arguments and sensible motivations for ethical behaviour on the part of technology developers and data processing actors is needed.

Planned activity(ies) / Activité(s) envisagée(s) : Lunch Time Conference - Understanding the Internet of Things (IoT)

Imagine a world in which your car drives itself and you can do the housework using your smartphone. These ideas might seem like science fiction but they are not as futuristic as you might think. In fact, we are closer than ever to making them a reality. As we approach Data Protection Day on 28 January, the European Data Protection Supervisor (EDPS) provides you with a guide to the Internet of Things.

What is the Internet of Things?

The Internet of Things (IoT) can be described as an online network that not only enables us to interact with any connected device, but also enables these devices to interact with one another.

Almost without realising it, IoT has become a part of our everyday lives. Whether you wear a fitness tracker, use smart light bulbs in your home or simply own a smartphone you are connected to the IoT network.

However, while the IoT has the potential to improve our quality of life, making our daily routines quicker, easier and cheaper and creating opportunities for economic growth, it presents significant challenges for data protection.

What are the privacy risks associated with the Internet of Things?

IoT devices often rely on personal data to perform their tasks. However, the sheer volume of personal data generated by the various interconnected devices we use makes it hard for us to maintain full control over this data. This problem is compounded by a lack of transparency: when using IoT devices it is not always clear who is able to collect or has access to our data, or how our data might be used.

In the wrong hands, our personal data can be a powerful tool. Information collected from health devices or apps, for example, could be used to access sensitive health data, while information on how, when and from where we control our household appliances could be used to track our daily routines.

Security is a major concern. Operating outside the standard IT infrastructure, on which the majority of security measures are currently focused, IoT devices are often soft targets for hackers, who exploit them as a gateway to reach other connected systems, leaving our personal data vulnerable.

What is the EU doing to ensure our data is protected?

The General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR), which will enter into force on 25 May 2018, aims to give people greater control over how their data is collected and used by online service providers and provide protection against the unlawful processing of personal data.

Under the new legislation, developers will also be required to implement the principle of privacy by design and by default. This means that they will have to incorporate privacy and data protection into the design specifications of their products and will only be allowed to process personal data if they can prove that it is strictly necessary to do so for the product to provide the expected service.

Security is also addressed in the GDPR, which clearly outlines the need to implement a risk-management based approach to security. It also makes it mandatory to report any breach of personal data security to the relevant supervisory authority within 72 hours, which will certainly push IoT developers to integrate more robust security measures into their technologies.

New rules on privacy in electronic communications, which are currently under reform, will also contribute to ensuring a higher level of protection. This, combined with the GDPR and other new legislation, will represent an ambitious benchmark for the global operation of an Internet of Things that respects EU fundamental rights and values.
