Factsheet

BACKGROUND AND NORMATIVE FRAMEWORK

Sport attracts huge attention and is the most popular cultural practice of millions of Europeans including women and children. The important role sport plays for European societies is overshadowed by the cases of sexual violence against women and children. Despite the efforts undertaken by decision makers to create safer sport environments such as the European Sport Charter of the Council of Europe or the Recommendation CM/Rec\(2015\)2 of the Committee of Ministers to member States on gender mainstreaming in sport, sexual violence still happens - as shown in the context of the #metoo movement - against women and children.

“Sexual assault against children is an urgent human rights issue and fighting it should be a political priority”. (Council of Europe Commissioner for Human Rights, 2011)

The Council of Europe Convention on Protection of Children against Sexual Exploitation and Sexual Abuse, also known as “the Lanzarote Convention”, requires criminalisation of all kinds of sexual offences against children. It sets out that states in Europe and beyond shall adopt specific legislation and take measures to prevent sexual violence, to protect child victims and to prosecute perpetrators.

The Council of Europe Convention on preventing and combating violence against women and domestic violence is based on the understanding that violence against women is a form of gender-based violence that is committed against women because they are women. It is the obligation of the state to fully address it in all its forms and to take measures to prevent violence against women, protect its victims and prosecute the perpetrators. Failure to do so would make it the responsibility of the state. The convention leaves no doubt: there can be no real equality between women and men if women experience gender-based violence on a large-scale and state agencies and institutions turn a blind eye.

SCALING UP ACTION

To enhance the effectiveness and to achieve better progress of the actions taken in the fight against sexual violence, a holistic approach bringing together relevant stakeholders is considered crucial. The Council of Europe flagship initiative Start to Talk on children protection in sport pursues this multi-stakeholder approach. It aims at supporting capacity-building and at providing technical assistance for stakeholders on developing and implementing concrete, practical actions to:

- raise awareness and implement a campaign;
- develop or improve safeguarding and protection frameworks;
- organise training sessions/ workshops.

EPAS considers a similar approach, as developed in the framework of Start to Talk, to address sexual violence against women in sport.

ABOUT THE CONFERENCE

The conference shall foster the dialogue between public authorities, the sport movement and relevant stakeholder organisations such as victim support organisations to tackle sexual violence against women and children in sport in concrete ways. It will offer the opportunity to receive hands on information to address and deal with sexual violence against women and children in sport effectively.

ORGANISERS

The conference is co-organised by EPAS and the Ministry of Education and Culture of the Republic of Finland in the context of the Finnish Presidency of the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe.
