Background

Individuals or groups of persons under pre-trial investigation are likely to see their rights and freedoms affected. They may be subject to observation, surveillance, search, questioning and detention, prior to their appearance at trial, which could expose them to interferences of their rights guaranteed under various Articles of the European Convention on Human Rights ('the ECHR'). Furthermore, the evidence gained at this stage of the proceedings can decisively influence the fairness of the criminal proceedings as a whole. Finally, for a pre-trial investigation to fulfill the standards set under a number of substantive Articles of the ECHR, it must be conducted in a specific manner and following certain criteria. Therefore, understanding the requirements of the various Articles of the ECHR and their application to the pre-trial stage of the criminal proceedings is fundamental for investigators and legal professionals active at this stage of the proceedings.

The HELP online course on Pre-trial Investigation and the ECHR course explores where the ECHR and the exigencies of an investigation can conflict and assists professionals who have roles in a pre-trial investigation to understand their obligations under the ECHR.

The course covers human rights standards governing the use of various pre-trial investigation techniques, such as covert investigation and search, as well as standards developed in respect of the imposition of pre-trial detention and the treatment during pre-trial detention, the fair trial guarantees relevant for the pre-trial stage of the criminal proceedings, and the requirements to conduct an effective investigation into alleged violation of certain ECHR Articles. It provides an overview of the relevant case law of the European Court of Human Rights developed under Articles 2, 3, 5, 6 and 8 of the ECHR.

These topics are explored in a practical way, by using presentations, interactive screens, knowledge tests and reflective exercises.

Users will be led through the course by a hypothetical scenario which illustrates an on-going investigation.

The course was developed in 2016.
