Effective solutions that are fair for you and your partner

Cooperate

Map out your situation

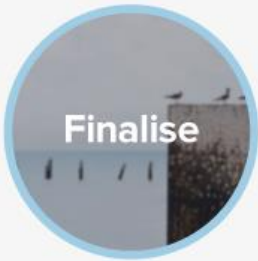

Building on your interests and the interests of your partner, you jointly work on finding agreements for solutions. Rechtswijzer provides tools that support you with this, like examples of what usually works for people who separate.

Before you start

Before you start working with Rechtwijzer, make sure you personally, clearly and straightforwardly discussed your decision to separate with your partner. It is also important that you have personally told your partner that you would like to use Rechtwijzer.

With every question, you give your own view. As much as possible, try to use your own words. After that, your partner can share their ideas. When you both shared your views, you work on a solution together.

We advise you to calmly answer the questions. Take time to thoroughly think through the questions and decisions. Some decisions are not easy. Allow your partner time to form his or her opinion.

Continue to review

Your separation plan is almost finished. The last step is to have an independent reviewer check whether your plan is realistic, correct and complete. The reviewer will focus on a number of issues, such as:

- Children: is the division of caretaking tasks properly planned and realistic?
- Owned home: is the home divided in a legally correct manner?
- Debt: has this been properly arranged with your creditors?
- Division of the costs of children: are they divided in a legally correct manner?
- Financial assistance for your partner: has this been divided in a legally correct manner?
- Tax implications: are these properly addressed?
- Marriage and partnership agreements: have these been dealt with in a legally correct manner?

The reviewer will contact you within two working days. You will learn whether your separation plan can be finalised, or some changes or provide additional documents are needed. Any decision made by the neutral expert will remain outside of this assessment: the decision-maker has already looked at the (legal) correctness and completion of your agreements. The reviewer only checks if this decision complies with the agreements you have made. It is possible that decision was made some time ago and the decision no longer fits agreements you may have made afterwards.
