THE INTERLAKEN PROCESS

- Interlaken Declaration adopted at the High-level Conference held in Interlaken (Switzerland) on 18-19 February 2010
- Contribution of the Steering Committee for Human Rights (CDDH) to the evaluation provided for by the Interlaken Declaration
- Comments from the European Court of Human Rights on the CDDH contribution
- Follow-up Decisions adopted at the Ministerial Session on 4 November 2020
THE INTERLAKEN PROCESS

Measures taken from 2010 to 2019 to secure the effective implementation of the European Convention on Human Rights

Council of Europe
French edition:

LE PROCESSUS D’INTERLAKEN

All requests concerning the reproduction or translation of all or part of this document should be addressed to the Directorate of Communication (F-67075 Strasbourg Cedex).

All other correspondence concerning this document should be addressed to the Directorate General of Human Rights and Rule of Law.

Layout: SPDP, Council of Europe
© Council of Europe, November 2020
Printed at the Council of Europe
As we mark the 70th anniversary of the European Convention on Human Rights, the Council of Europe is concluding a ten-year process aimed at reinforcing the effectiveness and sustainability of the Convention system as a whole.

The Interlaken Process, initiated by the 2010 Interlaken Declaration was a response to the European Court of Human Rights’ struggle to cope with a growing influx of applications. The package of reform measures implemented over the following decade has enabled this unique international system of human rights protection to remain truly effective.

The Interlaken Process, steered by the Committee of Ministers, relied on the efforts of the Court itself, including its implementation of the pilot judgment procedure, the effective filtering of applications and the expeditious handling of repetitive cases on the basis of well-established case law. The States Parties to the Convention have also participated in this collective effort, by improving knowledge and training on Convention standards, with domestic courts taking greater account of the European Court of Human Rights’ case law.

These achievements are significant but the progress that has been made must not be taken for granted. Problems persists, evolve and emerge and it is essential that our member states not only execute the Court's judgments, but also establish and maintain effective internal mechanisms to prevent human rights violations on their territory. This is their responsibility under the principle of subsidiarity.
I therefore welcome the work underway within the Steering Committee for Human Rights on the implementation of the Committee of Ministers’ related decisions. Its Ad Hoc Group responsible for negotiations on the EU’s accession to the European Convention on Human Rights is also doing important work to complete the coherence of Europe’s human rights architecture: an issue that was raised repeatedly throughout the Interlaken Process.

This publication is intended to serve as a source of inspiration for the authorities of our member states and the relevant bodies of the Council of Europe. I hope that it will also be useful for other international organisations and representatives of civil society.

Marija Pejčinović Burić
Secretary General
TABLE OF CONTENTS

- INTERLAKEN DECLARATION 7
  adopted at the High-level Conference on the Future of the European Court of Human Rights, 18-19 February 2010

- CONTRIBUTION OF THE STEERING COMMITTEE FOR HUMAN RIGHTS (CDDH) TO THE EVALUATION PROVIDED FOR BY THE INTERLAKEN DECLARATION 19

- COMMENTS FROM THE EUROPEAN COURT OF HUMAN RIGHTS ON THE CDDH CONTRIBUTION TO THE EVALUATION OF THE INTERLAKEN REFORM PROCESS 115

- FOLLOW-UP DECISIONS ADOPTED AT THE MINISTERIAL SESSION, ATHENS, 4 NOVEMBER 2020 127
INTERLAKEN DECLARATION

adopted at the High-Level Conference on the Future of the European Court of Human Rights (Interlaken, Switzerland, 18-19 February 2010)
The High-Level Conference meeting at Interlaken on 18 and 19 February 2010 at the initiative of the Swiss Chairmanship of the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe (“the Conference”):

1. Expressing the strong commitment of the States Parties to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (“the Convention”) and the European Court of Human Rights (“the Court”):

2. Recognising the extraordinary contribution of the Court to the protection of human rights in Europe;

3. Recalling the interdependence between the supervisory mechanism of the Convention and the other activities of the Council of Europe in the field of human rights, the rule of law and democracy;

4. Welcoming the entry into force of Protocol No. 14 to the Convention on 1 June 2010;

5. Noting with satisfaction the entry into force of the Treaty of Lisbon, which provides for the accession of the European Union to the Convention;

6. Stressing the subsidiary nature of the supervisory mechanism established by the Convention and notably the fundamental role which national authorities, i.e. governments, courts and parliaments, must play in guaranteeing and protecting human rights at the national level;

7. Noting with deep concern that the number of applications brought before the Court and the deficit between applications introduced and applications disposed of continues to grow;

8. Considering that this situation causes damage to the effectiveness and credibility of the Convention and its supervisory mechanism and represents a threat to the quality and the consistency of the case-law and the authority of the Court;

9. Convinced that over and above the improvements already carried out or envisaged additional measures are indispensable and urgently required in order to:

   i. achieve a balance between the number of judgments and decisions delivered by the Court and the number of incoming applications;
ii. enable the Court to reduce the backlog of cases and to adjudicate new cases within a reasonable time, particularly those concerning serious violations of human rights;

iii. ensure the full and rapid execution of judgments of the Court and the effectiveness of its supervision by the Committee of Ministers;

10. Considering that the present Declaration seeks to establish a roadmap for the reform process towards long-term effectiveness of the Convention system;

The Conference

(1) Reaffirms the commitment of the States Parties to the Convention to the right of individual petition;

(2) Reiterates the obligation of the States Parties to ensure that the rights and freedoms set forth in the Convention are fully secured at the national level and calls for a strengthening of the principle of subsidiarity;

(3) Stresses that this principle implies a shared responsibility between the States Parties and the Court;

(4) Stresses the importance of ensuring the clarity and consistency of the Court’s case-law and calls, in particular, for a uniform and rigorous application of the criteria concerning admissibility and the Court’s jurisdiction;

(5) Invites the Court to make maximum use of the procedural tools and the resources at its disposal;

(6) Stresses the need for effective measures to reduce the number of clearly inadmissible applications, the need for effective filtering of these applications and the need to find solutions for dealing with repetitive applications;

(7) Stresses that full, effective and rapid execution of the final judgments of the Court is indispensable;
(8) Reaffirms the need for maintaining the independence of the judges and preserving the impartiality and quality of the Court;

(9) Calls for enhancing the efficiency of the system to supervise the execution of the Court’s judgments;

(10) Stresses the need to simplify the procedure for amending Convention provisions of an organisational nature;

(11) Adopts the following Action Plan as an instrument to provide political guidance for the process towards long-term effectiveness of the Convention system.

Action Plan

A. Right of individual petition

1. The Conference reaffirms the fundamental importance of the right of individual petition as a cornerstone of the Convention system which guarantees that alleged violations that have not been effectively dealt with by national authorities can be brought before the Court.

2. With regard to the high number of inadmissible applications, the Conference invites the Committee of Ministers to consider measures that would enable the Court to concentrate on its essential role of guarantor of human rights and to adjudicate well-founded cases with the necessary speed, in particular those alleging serious violations of human rights.

3. With regard to access to the Court, the Conference calls upon the Committee of Ministers to consider any additional measure which might contribute to a sound administration of justice and to examine in particular under what conditions new procedural rules or practices could be envisaged, without deterring well-founded applications.
B. Implementation of the Convention at the national level

4. The Conference recalls that it is first and foremost the responsibility of the States Parties to guarantee the application and implementation of the Convention and consequently calls upon the States Parties to commit themselves to:

a) continuing to increase, where appropriate in co-operation with national human rights institutions or other relevant bodies, the awareness of national authorities of the Convention standards and to ensure their application;

b) fully executing the Court’s judgments, ensuring that the necessary measures are taken to prevent further similar violations;

c) taking into account the Court's developing case-law, also with a view to considering the conclusions to be drawn from a judgment finding a violation of the Convention by another State, where the same problem of principle exists within their own legal system;

d) ensuring, if necessary by introducing new legal remedies, whether they be of a specific nature or a general domestic remedy, that any person with an arguable claim that their rights and freedoms as set forth in the Convention have been violated has available to them an effective remedy before a national authority providing adequate redress where appropriate;

e) considering the possibility of seconding national judges and, where appropriate, other high-level independent lawyers, to the Registry of the Court;

f) ensuring review of the implementation of the recommendations adopted by the Committee of Ministers to help States Parties to fulfil their obligations.

5. The Conference stresses the need to enhance and improve the targeting and coordination of other existing mechanisms, activities and programmes of the Council of Europe, including recourse by the Secretary General to Article 52 of the Convention.
C. Filtering

6. The Conference:

   a) calls upon States Parties and the Court to ensure that comprehensive and objective information is provided to potential applicants on the Convention and the Court’s case-law, in particular on the application procedures and admissibility criteria. To this end, the role of the Council of Europe information offices could be examined by the Committee of Ministers;

   b) stresses the interest for a thorough analysis of the Court’s practice relating to applications declared inadmissible;

   c) recommends, with regard to filtering mechanisms,

      i. to the Court to put in place, in the short term, a mechanism within the existing bench likely to ensure effective filtering;

      ii. to the Committee of Ministers to examine the setting up of a filtering mechanism within the Court going beyond the single judge procedure and the procedure provided for in i).

D. Repetitive applications

7. The Conference:

   a) calls upon States Parties to:

      i. facilitate, where appropriate, within the guarantees provided for by the Court and, as necessary, with the support of the Court, the adoption of friendly settlements and unilateral declarations;

      ii. cooperate with the Committee of Ministers, after a final pilot judgment, in order to adopt and implement general measures capable of remedying effectively the structural problems at the origin of repetitive cases.

   b) stresses the need for the Court to develop clear and predictable standards for the “pilot judgment” procedure as regards selection of applications, the procedure to be followed and the treatment of adjourned cases, and to evaluate the effects of applying such and similar procedures;
c) calls upon the Committee of Ministers to:

i. consider whether repetitive cases could be handled by judges responsible for filtering (see above Section C);

ii. bring about a cooperative approach including all relevant parts of the Council of Europe in order to present possible options to a State Party required to remedy a structural problem revealed by a judgment.

E. The Court

8. Stressing the importance of maintaining the independence of the judges and of preserving the impartiality and quality of the Court, the Conference calls upon States Parties and the Council of Europe to:

a) ensure, if necessary by improving the transparency and quality of the selection procedure at both national and European levels, full satisfaction of the Convention’s criteria for office as a judge of the Court, including knowledge of public international law and of the national legal systems as well as proficiency in at least one official language. In addition, the Court's composition should comprise the necessary practical legal experience;

b) grant to the Court, in the interest of its efficient functioning, the necessary level of administrative autonomy within the Council of Europe.

9. The Conference, acknowledging the responsibility shared between the States Parties and the Court, invites the Court to:

a) avoid reconsidering questions of fact or national law that have been considered and decided by national authorities, in line with its case-law according to which it is not a fourth instance court;

b) apply uniformly and rigorously the criteria concerning admissibility and jurisdiction and take fully into account its subsidiary role in the interpretation and application of the Convention;

c) give full effect to the new admissibility criterion provided for in Protocol No. 14 and to consider other possibilities of applying the principle de minimis non curat praetor.
10. With a view to increasing its efficiency, the Conference invites the Court to continue improving its internal structure and working methods and making maximum use of the procedural tools and the resources at its disposal. In this context, it encourages the Court in particular to:

a) make use of the possibility to request the Committee of Ministers to reduce to five members the number of judges of the Chambers, as provided by Protocol No. 14;

b) pursue its policy of identifying priorities for dealing with cases and continue to identify in its judgments any structural problem capable of generating a significant number of repetitive applications.

F. Supervision of execution of judgments

11. The Conference stresses the urgent need for the Committee of Ministers to:

a) develop the means which will render its supervision of the execution of the Court’s judgments more effective and transparent. In this regard, it invites the Committee of Ministers to strengthen this supervision by giving increased priority and visibility not only to cases requiring urgent individual measures, but also to cases disclosing major structural problems, attaching particular importance to the need to establish effective domestic remedies;

b) review its working methods and its rules to ensure that they are better adapted to present-day realities and more effective for dealing with the variety of questions that arise.

G. Simplified Procedure for Amending the Convention

12. The Conference calls upon the Committee of Ministers to examine the possibility of introducing by means of an amending Protocol a simplified procedure for any future amendment of certain provisions of the Convention relating to organisational issues. This simplified procedure may be introduced through, for example:

a) a Statute for the Court;

b) a new provision in the Convention similar to that found in Article 41(d) of the Statute of the Council of Europe.
Implementation

In order to implement the Action Plan, the Conference:

(1) calls upon the States Parties, the Committee of Ministers, the Court and the Secretary General to give full effect to the Action Plan;

(2) calls in particular upon the Committee of Ministers and the States Parties to consult with civil society on effective means to implement the Action Plan;

(3) calls upon the States Parties to inform the Committee of Ministers, before the end of 2011, of the measures taken to implement the relevant parts of this Declaration;

(4) invites the Committee of Ministers to follow-up and implement by June 2011, where appropriate in co-operation with the Court and giving the necessary terms of reference to the competent bodies, the measures set out in this Declaration that do not require amendment of the Convention;

(5) invites the Committee of Ministers to issue terms of reference to the competent bodies with a view to preparing, by June 2012, specific proposals for measures requiring amendment of the Convention; these terms of reference should include proposals for a filtering mechanism within the Court and the study of measures making it possible to simplify the amendment of the Convention;

(6) invites the Committee of Ministers to evaluate, during the years 2012 to 2015, to what extent the implementation of Protocol No. 14 and of the Interlaken Action Plan has improved the situation of the Court. On the basis of this evaluation, the Committee of Ministers should decide, before the end of 2015, on whether there is a need for further action. Before the end of 2019, the Committee of Ministers should decide on whether the measures adopted have proven to be sufficient to assure sustainable functioning of the control mechanism of the Convention or whether more profound changes are necessary;

(7) asks the Swiss Chairmanship to transmit the present Declaration and the Proceedings of the Interlaken Conference to the Committee of Ministers;

(8) invites the future Chairmanships of the Committee of Ministers to follow-up on the implementation of the present Declaration.
Note

It is recalled that the Interlaken Declaration (2010) invited the Committee of Ministers to decide, before the end of 2019, whether the measures adopted in the course of the process of reform of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights had proven to be sufficient to assure sustainable functioning of the control mechanism of the Convention or whether more profound changes would be necessary.¹ The CDDH was asked to draft a Contribution to this evaluation provided for by the Interlaken Declaration.

At its 90th meeting (27-30 November 2018), the CDDH adopted a preliminary draft table of contents and gave guidance to its Secretariat for the preparation of its Contribution.² The Committee of experts on the system of the European Convention on Human Rights (DH-SYSC) adopted a draft of that Contribution at its 5th meeting in October 2019.³ The present CDDH Contribution to the evaluation provided for by the Interlaken Declaration has been adopted by the CDDH at its 92th meeting (26-29 November 2019).

² See document CDDH(2018)R90, § 24 (i) and Appendix VII.
EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

1. The extraordinary contribution of the Convention system to the protection and promotion of human rights and the rule of law in Europe and the central role it plays in maintaining democratic security and improving good governance across the continent have been repeatedly stressed during the Interlaken process.

2. Against the background of a continuing rise in the caseload of the European Court of Human Rights (the Court), the States Parties to the European Convention on Human Rights (the Convention) started a process of further reform of the Convention system at a high-level Conference held in Interlaken in 2010. The Interlaken Declaration adopted at that conference invited the Committee of Ministers to decide, before the end of 2019, whether the measures taken in the course of the reform process towards long-term effectiveness of the Convention system have proven to be sufficient to assure a sustainable functioning of the control mechanism of the Convention or whether more profound changes are necessary.

3. The Steering Committee for Human Rights (CDDH) was charged by the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe with a mid-term assessment of the Interlaken reform process which is contained in its 2015 report on “The longer-term future of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights”. It was subsequently asked to draft the present Contribution to the above-mentioned evaluation provided for by the Interlaken Declaration. It examines this question in three chapters. It first addresses the measures taken to secure an effective implementation of the Convention at the national level, in the phase before applications are lodged with the Court (A.). It then covers the measures taken regarding the applications pending before the Court (B.). It finally assesses the measures to secure an efficient execution of the judgments of the Court (C.). Subsequently, conclusions are drawn.

4. The implementation of the Convention at the national level has been improved by general measures which raise awareness of the Convention standards among all stakeholders in the member States and provide training on these standards. During the Interlaken process, the accessibility of the Convention standards in the member States has been improved by increased translations of significant judgments of the Court, summaries thereof and other information documents into the national languages. Furthermore, training on the Convention standards is increasingly provided by many different actors in the Convention system.
and has become more and more targeted to the needs of different legal professionals and law enforcement officials.

5. The national implementation of the Convention can be further improved by concrete measures to prevent specific breaches of the Convention or to provide an effective remedy at the national level if such breaches have occurred. Mechanisms are now in place in most member States to verify the compatibility of draft legislation with the Convention standards, but more consideration should still be given to the general principles developed by the Court in the case-law concerning other States. Domestic courts increasingly take account of the Court’s developing case-law in the application of the Convention. Protocol No. 16 to the Convention, which was elaborated in the course of the reform process and entered into force in August 2018, permits national courts of the member States which have ratified it to request the Court to give an advisory opinion on a Convention-related question under certain preconditions.

6. A key factor for a successful national implementation of the Convention is the existence of effective domestic remedies which are capable of providing adequate redress already at the national level for a violation of a Convention right and thereby make it unnecessary for applicants to bring their case before the Strasbourg Court. However, despite the successful creation of domestic remedies in many States, there is still a need to either put in place or further improve them in a number of States. Given that the continuously high numbers of repetitive applications impair the efficient functioning of the Court, the national implementation of the Convention in this regard still remains one of the principal challenges facing the Convention system. The national implementation of the Convention, in accordance with the principle of subsidiarity, should also be furthered by the ratification, by the two States which have not yet done so, of Protocol No. 15 to the Convention. This amending Protocol, equally elaborated during the Interlaken process, will introduce some changes to the procedure before the Court in order to accelerate and facilitate it, as well as to the admissibility criteria.

7. Independent National Human Rights Institutions (NHRIs), civil society and other relevant actors, as well as the Council of Europe’s co-operation activities should further assist in the national implementation of the Convention. In general, these actors, notably NHRIs, should be provided with appropriate conditions to play their role independently and without undue obstacles.
8. As regards the measures taken regarding the applications pending before the Court, the Court has managed to reduce their number considerably despite a continuously high number of new applications. It made full use of the possibilities provided by Protocol No. 14 to the Convention, which allowed for the assignment of applications to smaller judicial formations, and continuously kept streamlining the procedures before it.

9. The Court’s remaining caseload still discloses two major challenges: the reduction of the continuously high number of repetitive applications and the reduction of the high number of non-repetitive, potentially well-founded applications.

10. As regards the backlog of repetitive cases, further efforts are necessary by all actors in the Convention system. The States should put in place effective domestic remedies as soon as possible notably where systemic problems arise which lead to a large number of similar applications. A speedy execution of the Court’s judgments should be ensured, if appropriate by targeted assistance, notably by the Department for the Execution of Judgments. The Court, the Committee of Ministers and the States should continue striving to optimise their interaction in order to efficiently handle this group of cases. As for the backlog of non-repetitive, potentially well-founded cases, which often raise new questions regarding the interpretation of the Convention, the necessary resources need to be made available to the Court so that, backed by further measures to streamline its procedures, it will be able to properly deal with this backlog.

11. As regards inter-State applications, their increasing number and the breadth of the questions they raise cause specific difficulties, in particular concerning certain procedural aspects or concerning the way in which the facts are established. However, these questions require a more in-depth examination before conclusions can be drawn.

12. It is to be recalled in this context that during the reform process, the CDDH analysed a number of proposals for far-reaching changes to the procedure before the Court, but did not retain any of them. The finding it has made in its mid-term report in 2015 – an assessment which is shared by the Court – that the challenges the system is faced with are best addressed within its current framework are thus still valid. The system has further demonstrated its capacity to adapt and considerably improve its efficiency within that framework.
13. In order to strengthen the authority of the Court by safeguarding its independence and by attracting persons of the highest calibre to serve as judge on its bench, the CDDH suggests that the Committee of Ministers adopt a Declaration underlining both the importance of preventing disguised reprisals against former judges at the end of their mandate and of former judges being able to find again an adequate post in their country, respecting, at the same time, the diversity of the constitutional systems in the member States. It is further of the utmost importance to ensure that the independence of the Court and the binding nature of its judgments are respected by all the actors of the Convention system.

14. The CDDH further encourages the Committee of Ministers to reiterate its political support for the accession of the European Union to the Convention which is important for the coherence of human rights protection in Europe.

15. Different measures taken, above all, by member States, in the course of the Interlaken process regarding the execution of the Court’s judgments have allowed for real progress in ensuring both the full, effective and rapid execution of the Court’s judgments at the domestic level and also a more effective and transparent supervision thereof by the Committee of Ministers.

16. Domestic capacities for the rapid execution of judgments have been improved allowing a quicker submission of comprehensive action plans indicating the measures planned and/or taken to execute a judgment. State mechanisms for the coordination of the different measures necessary to ensure execution have also improved, notably by the nomination of coordinators responsible for the necessary concertations in the execution process, but their authority and resources should be reinforced. An improved information flow after the receipt of action plans would increase the efficiency of the execution process. As regards, in particular, the setting up of effective domestic remedies in the course of the execution of a judgment in order to prevent further similar breaches of the Convention, many important reforms have been adopted, but there is, as shown above, still a need to improve domestic remedies. The increasing role of national parliaments in supporting the execution process is to be welcomed and encouraged.

17. The process of supervision of the execution of judgments by the Committee of Ministers has been improved following the entry into force of new working methods in 2011. The introduction of a prioritisation system for cases in the execution process (enhanced and standard supervision) allowed the Committee of Ministers to concentrate on more complex cases. The speedier publication of relevant documents has increased the transparency of the process; its accessibility should be further increased, for instance by the rapid translation and dissemination of relevant Committee decisions. The Committee of Ministers remains engaged in a more intensive dialogue with respondent States including guidance through its decisions and resolutions. As regards, in particular, measures taken to ensure a speedy execution in relation to repetitive applications, the Committee has encouraged the effectiveness of domestic remedies, notably in response to pilot-judgment procedures, and managed to refer numerous repetitive applications to newly created domestic remedies, but there are exceptions.

18. A good information exchange with other stakeholders, including the Court, the Parliamentary Assembly and the Commissioner for Human Rights can considerably support the execution process. The further development of co-operation programmes and activities, providing technical assistance to States Parties for the execution of judgments, is essential and requires the necessary funding.

19. Continuing challenges in the supervision of the execution of the Court’s judgments comprise, in particular, the absence of political will to execute a judgment and technical reasons linked to the complexity or scope of execution measures required, including notably cases involving questions of extraterritoriality, or their financial implications. In many of these cases, it is necessary to find ways and means of supplementing the technical support offered with suitable political levers.

20. It is, finally, an overarching positive feature of the Interlaken process that the dialogue between all the different actors in the Convention system has considerably intensified.

21. It is concluded that the Interlaken reform process, backed by the effects of Protocol No. 14 and the contributions of all stakeholders, was crucial for the system and has led to significant advances, which also bode well for the system’s capacity to meet new challenges and to consolidate and further develop the progress made. The necessity of a new major revision of the system is therefore not apparent. What appears important is rather to allow the Convention system as it has emerged from the Interlaken process and Protocol No. 14, provided with sufficient resources which the States Parties have committed themselves to provide, to demonstrate fully its potential. The dialogue between all the different actors in the Convention system should continue and create the necessary synergies enabling all actors in the system to play their respective roles in their shared responsibility to implement the Convention. Securing the long-term effectiveness of the Convention system is an ongoing work that requires the full commitment and continued efforts of all parties concerned.
22. The evaluation of the reform process towards long-term effectiveness of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights (the Convention), to be carried out according to the Interlaken Declaration, is one further step in the broader context of the reform of the Convention system. Since the European Court of Human Rights (the Court) took up its work in 1959, the member States of the Council of Europe have adopted several protocols to the Convention with the aim of improving and strengthening its supervisory mechanism. In 1998 in particular, Protocol No. 11 to the Convention entered into force which provided for a wholly judicial system of determination of applications, replacing the original two-tier structure comprising the Court and the Commission by a permanent Court. The continuing rise in the Court’s caseload was further addressed by Protocol No. 14, which entered into force in 2010 and notably provided for smaller judicial formations to deal with clearly inadmissible cases and well-founded repetitive cases.\(^4\)

23. In 2010 a first intergovernmental conference on the future of the Court in Interlaken marked the beginning of the so-called Interlaken process of further reform. The Interlaken Declaration sought to establish a roadmap for the reform process towards long-term effectiveness of the Convention system.\(^5\) It notably invited the Committee of Ministers to decide, before the end of 2019, whether the measures adopted in the course of the reform process, in particular the measures to implement Protocol No. 14 and the Interlaken Action Plan, have proven to be sufficient to assure sustainable functioning of the control mechanism of the Convention or whether more profound changes are necessary.\(^6\)

24. Since the Interlaken conference, the measures proposed to guarantee the long-term effectiveness of the Convention system have been further developed in the Declarations adopted at four further high-

\(^4\) See for the text of, and further information on these Protocols the website of the Council of Europe’s Treaty Office.

\(^6\) See the Interlaken Declaration, Implementation of the Action Plan, point 6.

25. According to its terms of reference for the 2018-2019 biennium, the Committee of experts on the system of the European Convention on Human Rights (DH-SYSC), under the supervision of the CDDH, is to: “contribute to the evaluation set out by the Interlaken Declaration, before the end of 2019, with a view to formulating proposals to the Committee of Ministers as to whether the measures adopted so far have proven to be sufficient to ensure sustainable functioning of the system of the Convention or whether more profound changes are necessary (deadline: 31 December 2019).”11

26. Following the High-Level Conference regarding the reform of the Convention system in Copenhagen on 12–13 April 2018, the Ministers’ Deputies, at their 1317th meeting on 30 May 2018, further invited the CDDH to consider several additional topics in the present report, relating to the Court’s backlog of cases, the facilitation of friendly settlements or unilateral declarations, inter-State disputes and the situation of judges of the Court after the end of their mandate.12

27. Emphasis was laid in the Interlaken process, in particular, on the shared responsibility notably of the Court and the States Parties for the implementation of the Convention. The present report shall accordingly conduct the assessment of the sufficiency of the measures to ensure sustainable functioning of the Convention system adopted in the course

---

7 See the Izmir Declaration of 26/27 April 2011 of the High Level Conference on the Future of the European Court of Human Rights.
8 See the Brighton Declaration of 19/20 April 2012 of the High Level Conference on the Future of the European Court of Human Rights.
9 See the Brussels Declaration of 27 March 2015 of the High-level Conference on the “Implementation of the European Convention on Human Rights, our shared responsibility”.
10 See the Copenhagen Declaration of 12/13 April 2018 of the High-Level Conference on “Continued Reform of the European Court of Human Rights Convention System – Better balance, improved Protection”.
11 See the terms of reference given by the Committee of Ministers to the DH-SYSC as adopted by the Committee of Ministers at its 1300th meeting, 21-23 November 2017, document CM(2017)131-addfinal. This work is carried out in the light of the results achieved in the framework of the further ongoing activities of the DH-SYSC, that is, the preparation of a draft report concerning the place of the European Convention on Human Rights in the European and international legal order and the follow-up to the decisions that may be taken by the Committee of Ministers further to the submission, in December 2017, of the CDDH report on the process of selection and election of the judges at the European Court of Human Rights. of the Interlaken reform process in three chapters. It reflects the different levels at which an effective implementation of the Convention needs to be secured. It addresses first the implementation of the Convention at the national level and means to prevent and remedy breaches of the Convention before applications are lodged with the Court (A.) It then covers the stage of applications pending before the Court (B.) and finally addresses the execution of the judgments of the Court (C.) Subsequently, some conclusions are drawn.\textsuperscript{13}

28. In its different sections, the report has regard to the specific measures which successive high-level conferences considered important to arrive at the aim of the reform process to secure the long-term effectiveness of the Convention system. It describes the follow-up which has been given by the different actors in the Convention system to the measures called for and the results obtained thereby. It will further provide an assessment of whether the measures adopted so far in the reform process have proved sufficient to ensure a sustainable functioning of the Convention system or whether further changes are needed, while having regard to the fact, which has been stressed by the CDDH,\textsuperscript{14} that this question has already been partially answered in previous CDDH reports.

29. The present report accordingly takes as an important basis the mid-term assessment of the reform process contained in the CDDH’s 2015 report on “The longer-term future of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights”.\textsuperscript{15} It further has regard to subsequent developments as they result notably from the member States’ reports on the national implementation of the Convention, the Court’s reports on further measures taken in the reform process as well as the Committee of Ministers’ Annual Reports on its supervision of the execution of judgments.\textsuperscript{16}

\textsuperscript{13} The CDDH adopted the draft table of contents for the present report at its 90th meeting (27-30 November 2018), see CDDH(2018)R90, § 24 (i) and Appendix VII.

\textsuperscript{14} See CDDH(2018)R90, § 24 ii).

30. The implementation of the Convention at the national level can be improved, on the one hand, by general measures which raise awareness of the Convention standards and provide training on them. On the other hand, more concrete measures can be taken at the national level by member States to prevent specific breaches of the Convention or to provide remedies already at the national level if such breaches have occurred. In addition, the Council of Europe can play an important role in assisting and encouraging member States in this task.

I. Raising awareness of, and providing training for national authorities and other actors in the Convention system on the Convention standards

1. The accessibility of the Convention standards

31. National authorities and other actors in the Convention system will be better aware of the Convention standards if the latter are more easily accessible to them. This is particularly true where information is available in these actors' own national language. Consequently, the translation of significant judgments and decisions of the Court or their summaries into national languages has been encouraged on multiple occasions during the reform process as an important means to support a better implementation of the Convention at the national level.\(^\text{17}\)

32. Most member States translate systematically the Court’s judgments, or summaries thereof, in their national languages.\(^\text{18}\) They

---

\(^{17}\) See the Brussels Declaration of 27 March 2015 of the High-level Conference on the “Implementation of the European Convention on Human Rights, our shared responsibility”, part 2. f) and g) and also part B.1.a); the Brighton Declaration, § 9 d) i) and ii) and § 9 h); the Izmir Declaration of 26/27 April 2011 of the High Level Conference on the Future of the European Court of Human Rights, part B.1.d); and the Copenhagen Declaration of 12/13 April 2018 of the High-Level Conference on “Continued Reform of the European Court of Human Rights Convention System – Better balance, improved Protection”, § 16 d); and also the CDDH Report on “The longer-term future of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights” adopted on 11 December 2015, §§ 43, 45 and 72 ii) b. See previously already the Committee of Ministers’ Recommendation Rec(2002)13 on the publication and dissemination in the member States of the text of the European Convention on Human Rights and of the case-law of the European Court of Human Rights of 18 December 2002.

\(^{18}\) Following discussions within the CDDH, the use of automatic translations of the Court’s case-law was not encouraged at this stage, see document DH-SYSC-III(2019)02 often disseminate these translations, as well as information on the Convention, the Court and its case-law via national databases.\textsuperscript{19} Furthermore, the Court developed a case-law translation programme, financed by the Human Rights Trust Fund and by some member States. Under that programme, 3,500 translations were commissioned with project funds and another 14,000 translations were provided by partners such as Governments, Bar associations, judicial training centres, and civil society organisations in over thirty languages other than English and French.\textsuperscript{20} The Court’s HUDOC database now contains not only the Court’s case-law in the official languages English and/or French, but equally provides the said non-official translations thereof.\textsuperscript{21} The creation of freely accessible national data-bases, the publication and free dissemination of summaries of the Court’s case-law and the translation also of judgments and decisions concerning other member States into national languages, as well as the provision of links to the Court’s HUDOC database on official national websites are good practices to be encouraged and followed.\textsuperscript{22}

33. The Court has further issued a series of some 80 thematic factsheets giving an overview over the relevant case-law concerning various topics. A number of these factsheets have been translated into non-official languages with the support of the respective national Governments; they are all available on the Court’s website.\textsuperscript{23} The Court has further published a number of case-law Guides on different Articles of the Convention in a number of languages\textsuperscript{24} as well as several information documents concerning the criteria for the admissibility of an application.\textsuperscript{25}

\textsuperscript{19} See the CDDH report on measures taken by the member States to implement relevant parts of the Brussels Declaration, document CM(2019)149, §§ 17-22 and 75-76.
\textsuperscript{20} See the CDDH report on measures taken by the member States to implement relevant parts of the Brussels Declaration, document CM(2019)149, § 84; The Interlaken process and the Court, 2016 Report of 1 September 2016, §§ 32-35; and the CDDH Report on “The longer-term future of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights” adopted on 11 December 2015, § 43.
\textsuperscript{21} See: https://www.echr.coe.int/Pages/home.aspx?p=caselaw/HUDOC&c=.
\textsuperscript{22} See the CDDH report on measures taken by the member States to implement relevant parts of the Brussels Declaration, document CM(2019)149, § 83.
\textsuperscript{24} See the Court’s website for links to the different case-law Guides.
\textsuperscript{25} See also chapter B.I.2.(a) below.
34. During the reform process, repeated calls have been made to increase co-operation with National Human Rights Institutions and other relevant bodies with a view to better national implementation of the Convention.\textsuperscript{26} In some member States, National Human Rights Institutions have an important role in providing information on the Convention which is published essentially through their websites.\textsuperscript{27}

2. Training on the Convention standards

35. The key role of the training of legal professionals and law-enforcement officials in the implementation of the Convention has been continuously underlined in the reform process. States Parties have notably stressed that efforts should be increased at national level to raise awareness among members of parliament and improve the training of judges, prosecutors, lawyers and national officials on the Convention and its implementation, including as regards the execution of judgments, by ensuring that it constitutes an integral part of their vocational and in-service training, where relevant, including by having recourse to the Human Rights Education for Legal Professionals (HELP) programme of the Council of Europe, as well as to the training programmes of the Court and to its publications.\textsuperscript{28}

36. In line with this call, and having regard to the important developments in university education and professional training in human rights in the 47 member States of the Council of Europe, the CDDH was charged with updating an important Recommendation in that field, Recommendation Rec(2004)4 of the Committee of Ministers to member States on the European Convention on Human Rights in university education and professional training.\textsuperscript{29} In June 2019 it adopted a new draft Recommendation on the topic for transmission to the Committee of

\textsuperscript{26} See the Interlaken Declaration, cited above, part B.4.a); the Brighton Declaration, cited above, § 4; the Brussels Declaration, cited above, preamble, point 7, and part B.2.a), f) and j); and the Copenhagen Declaration, cited above, § 14.

\textsuperscript{27} See the CDDH report on measures taken by the member States to implement relevant parts of the Brussels Declaration, document CM(2019)149, §§ 14 and 18.

\textsuperscript{28} See the Brussels Declaration, cited above, part B.1.b) – c); See also the Brighton Declaration, cited above, § 9.v) – vi); the Izmir Declaration, cited above, part B.1.c); and the Copenhagen Declaration, cited above, § 16 c). The Court has also expressed its agreement with this idea, see the Comment from the Court on the report of the CDDH on the longer-term future of the Convention system of February 2016.

\textsuperscript{29} See document CM(2017)131-addfinal; see also the Committee of Ministers’ Reply to Recommendation 2039 (2014) on “the European Convention on Human Rights: the need to reinforce the training of legal professionals”, adopted at the 1204th meeting of the Ministers’ Deputies, 2-3 July 2014, § 3.

Furthermore, the Council of Europe’s HELP Programme notably provides an increasing number of online training courses on the Convention over its E-learning platform which aim at providing up-to-date and tailor-made training on Convention issues in the legal professionals’ respective fields. The HELP network of national training institutions for judges, prosecutors and lawyers in the 47 Council of Europe member States further promotes training of legal professionals on Convention issues and shares best practices in this respect. HELP’s activities are closely coordinated with other existing training-related activities of the Council of Europe, inter alia, with the CDDH’s above-mentioned work on the update of Recommendation Rec(2004)4 or with the establishment of an interactive online platform on business and human rights in co-operation with the CDDH which had drafted a Recommendation on that topic.

---

31 See document CM/Rec(2019)5, adopted by the Committee of Ministers at the 1357th meeting of the Ministers’ Deputies.

33 See for a call for improving the coordination of other existing mechanisms, activities and programmes of the Council of Europe the Interlaken Declaration, cited above, part B.5.

38. The Court provides regular training sessions and study visits for judges and lawyers. Moreover, secondments of national judges, prosecutors and other highly qualified legal experts to the Court’s Registry provide a good opportunity for these legal professionals to acquire the knowledge and skills to work on Convention-related cases. Successive high-level conferences have called upon the States Parties to continue promoting such temporary secondments, which started in early 2009 and are highly appreciated by the Court. In the past years, some 30 persons were seconded each year to the Court’s Registry, in addition to around ten national judges in training which were sent to the Court via the European Judicial Training Network. These legal professionals also contribute to diminishing the Court’s backlog. Because of the nature of the work at the Court, it appears preferable that such secondments last at least two years.

39. In the member States, a number of professional training measures on the Convention standards for legal professionals are organised, for instance, by the Government Agents’ Office, the Ministry of Justice and highest courts, but also national judicial institutions and bar associations as well as in co-operation with National Human Rights Institutions.

---

36 See the Brighton Declaration, cited above, § 20 b); the Brussels Declaration, cited above, Action Plan, B.1.f); and the Copenhagen Declaration, cited above, § 53.
37 See, for instance, the Opening address of the former President of the Court, Guido Raimondi, in: Dialogue between judges 2016, p. 37.
39 See chapter B.I.5. below.
40 See also for the relevant experiences in the Department for the Execution of Judgments chapter C.II.2.(g) below.
41 See the CDDH report on measures taken by the member States to implement relevant parts of the Brussels Declaration, document CM(2019)149, §§ 22-32.
II. Concrete measures to prevent and remedy breaches of the Convention at the national level

1. Measures taken at the legislative, executive or judicial level

   (a) Creation of effective domestic remedies

40. The subsidiary character of the Convention system is articulated in Article 13 of the Convention. State Parties must provide an effective domestic remedy before a national authority to deal with the substance of an arguable complaint under the Convention; that remedy must be exhausted by the applicant before lodging his application with the Court (Article 35 § 1 of the Convention).42 Successive high-level Conferences have stressed the particular importance of creating or further improving existing domestic remedies for alleged Convention violations, especially in situations of serious systemic or structural problems.43

41. As will be further set out below, an effective domestic remedy has a substantial impact on the number of applications pending before the Court as it prevents large numbers of further similar (repetitive) applications being lodged with the Court.44 For the same reason, particular importance is attached during the process of the execution of judgments disclosing systemic or structural problems to the establishment of effective domestic remedies, as equally set out below.45

42. In the course of the Interlaken process, States have introduced numerous domestic remedies addressing different alleged breaches of the Convention, notably compensatory remedies for excessive length of judicial proceedings or of pre-trial detention, for inappropriate conditions of detention or for the non-enforcement of domestic court decisions, and have also interpreted existing domestic remedies so as to prevent a breach of the Convention.46

42 See Kudła v. Poland [GC], no. 30210/96, § 152, 26 October 2000; and Süurmeli v. Germany [GC], no. 75529/01, § 98, 8 June 2006 with further references.
43 See the Interlaken Declaration, cited above, Action Plan, point B.4.d) and Point F.11.; the Izmir Declaration, cited above, part B.1.a.; the Brighton Declaration, cited above, § 4; the Brussels Declaration, cited above, point B.1. e); and the Copenhagen Declaration, cited above, §§ 13 and 16 a).
44 See chapter B.I.5.(c) below.
45 See chapter C.II.3. below.
46 See for numerous examples in this respect the CDDH report on measures taken by the member States to implement relevant parts of the Brussels Declaration, document CM(2019)149, §§ 44-48 and 59-60; the Draft additional elements resulting from the Copenhagen Declaration that should be reflected in CDDH’s future Interlaken follow-up report, document CDDH-BU(2019)R101 Addendum of 12 June 2019, §§ 18-21,
43. Nevertheless, it has repeatedly been found that there is still a need to further improve domestic remedies. The issue of effective remedies should therefore stay at the heart of any activity supporting the national implementation of the Convention and in the thematic work of the relevant committees of the Council of Europe, especially those involving representatives of domestic justice systems.

(b) Compatibility of (draft) legislation with the Convention

44. Breaches of the Convention can further be effectively prevented by a verification of the compatibility of draft and existing laws with the Convention, the importance of which has been highlighted in the reform process.

45. An important non-binding instrument of the Committee of Ministers in this field is Rec(2004)5 on the verification of the compatibility of draft laws, existing laws and administrative practice with the standards laid down in the European Convention on Human Rights.

49 See the Interlaken Declaration, cited above, part B.4; the Brighton Declaration, cited above, 9.c.i); the Brussels Declaration, cited above, B.1.d); and the Copenhagen Declaration, cited above, § 16.b). See for detailed proposals in this regard equally the CDDH Report on “The longer-term future of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights”, cited above, § 197; and also the Comment from the Court on the report of the CDDH on the longer-term future of the Convention system of February 2016, § 3.

50 Some other recommendations on various measures to improve the national implementation of the Convention, prepared by the CDDH and adopted by the CM are: Recommendation No. R(2000)2 of the Committee of Ministers to member States on the re-examination or reopening of certain cases at domestic level following judgments of the European Court of Human Rights; Recommendation Rec(2002)13 of the Committee of Ministers to member States on the publication and dissemination in the member States of the text of the European Convention on Human Rights and of the case-law of the European Court of Human Rights; Recommendation Rec(2004)4 of the Committee of Ministers to member States on the European Convention on Human Rights in university education and professional training; Recommendation Rec(2004)6 of the Committee of Ministers to member States on the improvement of domestic remedies; Recommendation CM/Rec(2008)2 of the Committee of Ministers to member States on efficient domestic capacity for rapid execution of judgments of the European Court of Human Rights; Recommendation CM/Rec(2010)3 of the Committee of Ministers to member States on
The States’ reports on the measures they have taken in this respect during the reform process showed that the practice of verifying the compatibility of draft laws with the Convention is well-established in many States. The compatibility of draft legislation with the Convention and the Court’s case-law is often subject to multi-layered national verification mechanisms. Systematic supervision of draft laws is generally carried out at the executive and then at the parliamentary level and even with the involvement of the Constitutional Court. National human rights structures are also consulted, including, where appropriate, National Human Rights Institutions. In some States, National Human Rights Institutions have a mandate to advise on the compatibility of draft legislation with the Convention. In a number of States, “Compatibility Guidelines” intended for government officials within national ministries and members of Parliament (notably, Parliamentary Committees) have been introduced. These Guidelines may be used for assessing the compatibility with the Convention during the process of drafting or amending of a law or when assessing the compatibility of administrative practices. To the extent that the Convention is, in one way or another, an integral part of the internal legal order in all of the States Parties to the Convention, ensuring compliance with the Convention is inherent in the legislative process.

---

51 See the CDDH report on measures taken by the member States to implement relevant parts of the Brussels Declaration, document CM(2019)149, §38; see also the Overview of the exchange of views held by the DH-SYSC at its 1st meeting (25-27 April 2016) on the verification of the compatibility of legislation with the Convention (arrangements, advantages, obstacles), document DH-SYSC(2016)013-Rev, §§8-9.

52 Overview of the exchange of views held by the DH-SYSC at its 1st meeting (25-27 April 2016) on the verification of the compatibility of legislation with the Convention (arrangements, advantages, obstacles), document DH-SYSC(2016)013-Rev, §§8-9; see also the Compilation of written contributions concerning mechanisms for ensuring the compatibility of laws with the Convention (arrangements, advantages, obstacles), document DH-SYSC(2016)006-REV; and the Information on Recommendation Rec(2004)5 of the Committee of Ministers on the verification of the compatibility of draft laws, existing laws and administrative practice with the standards laid down in the European Convention on Human Rights extracted from the national reports on the implementation of the Brighton Declaration, document DH-SYSC(2016)002REV. See also the Paris Principles 3 (b): A national institution shall, inter alia, have the following responsibilities: ... [t]o promote and ensure the harmonization of national legislation, regulations and practices with the international human rights instruments to which the State is a party, and their effective implementation.

53 See the CDDH report on measures taken by the member States to implement relevant parts of the Brussels Declaration, document CM(2019)149, §42.
47. The examination of the compatibility of existing laws and administrative practices with the Convention usually lies with the Supreme Courts and/or the Constitutional Courts, which are habilitated to declare them invalid for non-compliance with the Convention or, at least, provide Convention-based guidance with a view to changing them.54

48. In a majority of member States, no special mechanisms have been put in place for assessing the appropriateness and effectiveness of compatibility verification mechanisms. However, a kind of evaluation does take place in the framework of the execution process.55

49. The Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe (PACE) has equally taken initiatives to strengthen the role of parliaments in the implementation of the Convention on national level.56

50. The CDDH has welcomed the well-established practice in member States of a verification of the compatibility of draft laws with the Convention. It has however pointed out that means for ensuring a better and earlier identification of existing laws and administrative practices which are in breach of the Convention should be developed.57

55 See the Overview of the exchange of views held by the DH-SYSC at its 1st meeting (25-27 April 2016) on the verification of the compatibility of legislation with the Convention (arrangements, advantages, obstacles), document DH-SYSC(2016)013-Rev, § 59. The question of compatibility of legislation with the Convention is also related to the measures taken by member States to enhance the domestic capacity for the execution of the Court’s judgments in the light of Recommendation CM/Rec(2008)2 on efficient domestic capacity for rapid execution of judgments of the European Court of Human Rights, see Guide to good practice on the implementation of that Recommendation, document CM(2017)92-add3final (= CDDH(2017)R87 Addendum I).

57 See the CDDH report on measures taken by the member States to implement relevant parts of the Brussels Declaration, document CM(2019)149, § 92.
The CDDH has further considered that States should also give consideration to the general principles which are developed in the case-law as a whole, including, where appropriate, judgments against other States, in order to implement fully and effectively the Convention at national level. In many States, judgments and decisions regarding other States are increasingly taken into account, and in some States, the obligation to take into account the Court's developing case-law and draw conclusions from judgments and decisions regarding other States is even enshrined in law.

(c) Domestic courts’ direct application of the Convention

The domestic courts’ direct application of the Convention or direct reference made to the Court's case-law is one of the States’ effective means to implement and prevent breaches of the Convention which has been repeatedly referred to in the reform process.

States have reported that the Convention has been incorporated into their domestic law and consequently can be directly relied on by the litigants and applied by the national courts. Whereas there is no Convention-based legal obligation upon States Parties to abide by final decisions of the Court, the effectiveness of a State’s commitment to the Convention can be demonstrated through its domestic implementation of the Court’s judgments and decisions. States have made efforts to ensure that the Court’s judgments and decisions are reviewed and taken into account by the highest courts in the domestic legal system.

58 See the CDDH Report on “The longer-term future of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights” adopted on 11 December 2015, §§ 24, 71 i); See also the CDDH report on measures taken by the member States to implement relevant parts of the Interlaken and Izmir Declarations, document CM(2012)167 (= CDDH(2012)R76 Addendum I); the Contribution of the Court to the Brussels High-Level Conference, 26 January 2015, § 5; the Preliminary opinion of the Court, in preparation for the Brighton Conference, adopted by the Plenary Court on 20 February 2012, document DD(2012)205, § 26; and the CDDH Final Report on measures that result from the Interlaken Declaration that do not require amendment of the Convention, document CDDH(2012)R74 Addendum II, § 8v, 4th point.

59 See the CDDH Report on “The longer-term future of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights”, cited above, § 38; See also, the CDDH report on measures taken by the member States to implement relevant parts of the Interlaken and Izmir Declarations, document CM(2012)167 (= CDDH(2012)R76 Addendum I), §§ 71-84 and 91.

60 See the Interlaken Declaration, cited above, Action Plan, part B.4.c); the Brussels Declaration, cited above, preamble, point 10 and part B.; and the Brighton Declaration, cited above, part A.7 and 9.c.iv); and also the CDDH report on measures taken by the member States to implement relevant parts of the Brussels Declaration, document CM(2019)149, § 93.

judgments of the Court in cases to which they are not parties, where appropriate, national courts may take account of the Court’s developing case-law and draw conclusions also from judgments against other States. Through direct references in judgments, in some States, the higher courts are raising awareness of the lower domestic courts and promote the harmonisation of national judicial practices with the Court’s case-law and the Convention’s requirements, which helps to prevent similar violations. Such references have been facilitated by the translation and dissemination of the relevant judgments of the Court and relevant publications described above. Translation and dissemination are very often implemented at the initiative of the Government Agent.

(d) Requests for an advisory opinion by the Court

54. Receiving an advisory opinion from the Court on a Convention-related issue raised in a case before the national courts can equally serve to prevent breaches of the Convention already at the national level.

55. The question of extending the jurisdiction of the Court to give advisory opinions to national courts has been discussed since 2005. Following the elaboration, by the CDDH, of specific proposals in this regard after the Izmir Conference, the latter was instructed after the Brighton Conference to draft an optional protocol to the Convention to 63 See the CDDH Report on the measures taken by the member States to implement relevant parts of the Interlaken and Izmir Declarations, document CM(2012)167 (= CDDH(2012)R76 Addendum I), §§ 72, 75. For the importance of this element to prevent repetitive applications see also chapter C.I.1. below.

---

64 See the CDDH report on measures taken by the member States to implement relevant parts of the Brussels Declaration, document CM(2019)149, §§ 43-46. See for a proposal that superior national courts shall adopt a practice of summarising in one part of their judgment the human rights arguments made before them and the reasons for their rejection, which could then be more easily be endorsed by the Court the CCBE Proposals for reform of the ECHR machinery of 28 June 2019 submitted to the CDDH, Recommendation A.1.
65 See chapter A.I.1. above.
this end. Protocol No. 16 to the Convention and its Explanatory Report were finally adopted by the Ministers’ Deputies in July 2013.

56. On 1 August 2018 Protocol No. 16 to the Convention entered into force in the ten member States which signed and ratified it until then. According to its Article 1, this Protocol allows the highest courts and tribunals of member States, as specified by the latter, to request the Court to give advisory opinions on questions of principle relating to the interpretation or application of the rights and freedoms defined in the Convention or the protocols thereto. So far, the Court has given one such advisory opinion and a second request for an advisory opinion has been accepted by the Court.

57. It is possible that the entry into force of Protocol No. 16 may increase the Court’s workload in the short term, even though the Court may, if necessary, refuse requests for advisory opinions (see Article 2 of Protocol No. 16). The aim of the Protocol in the longer term is that the Protocol will lead to more cases being dealt with rapidly at national level without the need to engage the Convention mechanism.

(e) Exchange of information and experiences on the Convention’s implementation

58. Finally, fostering the exchange of information and best practices concerning the implementation of the Convention at the national level can improve the implementation of the Convention. In this context, national “contact points” for human rights matters within the relevant executive, judicial and legislative authorities, as suggested at the Brussels Conference, are of relevance. The States had also called for networks to be created between such “contact points” through meetings, information exchanges, hearings and the transmission of annual or thematic reports or newsletters. Since then, networks of contact persons or inter-ministerial committees and/or working groups have been established in 68 See the Brighton Declaration, cited above, § 12.d); and document CDDH(2012)R77 Addendum I and Addendum II. The Court was invited to give its Opinion on Draft Protocol No. 16, adopted on 6 May 2013.

---

69 1176th meeting of the Ministers’ Deputies, 10 July 2013.
70 See the website of the Council of Europe Treaty Office for the text of, and further information on Protocol No. 16 to the Convention, CETS No. 214.
71 Advisory opinion concerning the recognition in domestic law of a legal parent-child relationship between a child born through a gestational surrogacy arrangement abroad and the intended mother [GC], requested by the French Court of Cassation (Request no. P16-2018-001), 10 April 2019.
73 See the Brussels Declaration, cited above, part B.2.i).
several States. The Government Agent often plays an important role within those networks.\textsuperscript{74}

59. On an intergovernmental level, the Brussels Conference called upon States Parties to foster the exchange of information and best practices with other States, particularly for the implementation of general measures.\textsuperscript{75} The CDDH, as well as the Government Agents’ network, exchange information concerning the implementation of the Convention and execution of the Court’s judgments on a regular basis. This assists member States in developing their domestic capacities and facilitates their access to relevant information.\textsuperscript{76} As shown below, exchanges of information between domestic supreme courts further take place within the Superior Courts Network.\textsuperscript{77} As equally set out below, information is also exchanged between member States in the course of thematic debates in the Committee of Ministers.\textsuperscript{78}

2. Measures taken to strengthen the role of civil society and National Human Rights Institutions

60. The importance of the participation of National Human Rights Institutions (NHRI) and civil society in effective national implementation of the Convention has been continuously highlighted by various actors in the reform process.\textsuperscript{79}

\textsuperscript{74}See the CDDH report on measures taken by the member States to implement relevant parts of the Brussels Declaration, document CM(2019)149, § 78.

\textsuperscript{75}See the Brussels Declaration, cited above, part B.2.e).

\textsuperscript{76}See for example the latest terms of reference of the DH-SYSC for the 2018-2019 biennium, as adopted by the Committee of Ministers at its 1300th meeting, 21-23 November 2017, document CM(2017)131-addfinal and document DH-SYSC(2018)01; See also the Overview of the exchange of views held by the DH-SYSC at its 1st meeting (25-27 April 2016) on the verification of the compatibility of legislation with the Convention (arrangements, advantages, obstacles), document DH-SYSC(2016)013-Rev. For more information on these exchanges of views held by the DG-GDR and the DH-SYSC, see the specific web page, available at: https://www.coe.int/en/web/human-rights-intergovernmental-co-operation/echr-system/implementation-and-execution-judgments

\textsuperscript{77}See chapter B.III.1. below.

\textsuperscript{78}See chapter C.II.2.(h) below.

\textsuperscript{79}See the Interlaken Declaration, part B.4.a); the Brighton Declaration, cited above, § 4; the Brussels Declaration, cited above, preamble, point 7, and part B.2.a), f) and j); and the Copenhagen Declaration, cited above, §§ 14, 18. See also the CDDH Report on “The longer-term future of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights” adopted on 11 December 2015, §§ 58 and 195 i); and the CDDH report on measures taken by the member States to implement relevant parts of the Interlaken and Izmir Declarations, document CM(2012)167 (= CDDH(2012)R76 Addendum I), § 153; The contribution of national human rights structures to the implementation of the Convention was already highlighted in the Report of the Group of Wise Persons to the Committee of Ministers in 2006, see document CM(2006)203.
States have been called upon, in particular, to consider the establishment of an independent National Human Rights Institution in accordance with the Paris Principles of the United Nations where there is no such institution. It appears from the evaluation of the measures taken by the member States to implement relevant parts of the Brussels Declaration that independent National Human Rights Institutions have now been established in the majority of the States. These National Human Rights Institutions are fully or partially complying with the Paris Principles.

The CDDH concluded that the States should strive to ensure appropriate conditions for NHRIs to carry out their activities and play their role independently and without undue obstacles. Furthermore, States which have indicated that given the size of the country or given the limited number of violations of the Convention, it did not seem indispensable to establish such an institution, could envisage reconsidering their approach to the issue and possibly identify such an institution among the already existing bodies. The CDDH is currently preparing a revision of Recommendation No. R(97)14 of the Committee of Ministers to member States on the establishment of independent national institutions for promotion and protection of human rights.

Effective national implementation requires the engagement of and interaction between a wide range of actors to ensure that legislation, and other measures and their application in practice comply fully with the Convention. These include, in particular, members of government, public officials, parliamentarians, judges and prosecutors, as well as national human rights institutions, civil society, universities, training institutions and representatives of legal professions.

---

80 See the Brighton Declaration, cited above, part 9.c.i); the Brussels Declaration, cited above, part B.1.g); and the Copenhagen Declaration, cited above, § 18; and also the CDDH Report on “The longer-term future of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights”, cited above, § 197 ix). The United Nations Paris Principles are available at: https://www.un.org/ruleoflaw/files/PRINC1~5.PDF.

81 See the CDDH report on measures taken by the member States to implement relevant parts of the Brussels Declaration, document CM(2019)149, §§ 52-53, 99; See also, the CDDH report on measures taken by the member States to implement relevant parts of the Brighton Declaration, document CM(2016)104-add1 (= CDDH(2016)R85 Addendum l), §§ 14-17.

82 See the CDDH report on measures taken by the member States to implement relevant parts of the Brussels Declaration, document CM(2019)149, § 99.

84 See also the Copenhagen Declaration, cited above, § 14; and Recommendation CM/Rec(2018)11 of the Committee of Ministers to member States on the need to strengthen the protection and promotion of civil society space in Europe, adopted by the
3. Measures taken by the Council of Europe

64. The Council of Europe can play an important role in assisting and encouraging national implementation of the Convention by providing technical assistance upon request to States Parties. It has been highlighted in the reform process that such technical assistance disseminates good practice and raises the standards of human rights observance in Europe.\(^{85}\)

65. The Committee of Ministers has adopted and launched online in May 2014 a Toolkit to inform public officials about the State's obligations under the European Convention on Human Rights, prepared by the CDDH.\(^{86}\) This Toolkit provides practical information intended to guide public officials in various everyday situations with which they may be confronted. Specifically, its target group is public officials working in the judicial system and those responsible for maintaining public order and administration of deprivation of liberty, but also any official in contact with the public whose actions may raise issues relating to the rights guaranteed by the Convention.

66. Co-operation activities through country-specific and/or thematic action plans have been implemented in a number of member States.\(^{87}\) Regarding the resources available to the technical assistance programmes, the CDDH has concluded that support has been expressed for activities facilitating the implementation of the Convention in all member States through technical assistance activities strategically targeted to the execution of Court judgments, the HELP programme and the educational activities of the Court.\(^{88}\)

67. The CDDH further found that in order to maximise impact and avoid duplication, better orientation and co-ordination of various Council of Europe assistance activities promoting implementation of the Convention to be needed.\(^{89}\)

\(^{85}\) See the Brighton Declaration, cited above, part A.8, 9.e) and 9.f), g) and i).
\(^{86}\) Available at: https://www.coe.int/en/web/echr-toolkit.
\(^{89}\) See the CDDH Report on "The longer-term future of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights", cited above, §§ 60, 74; see also the Contribution of the Court to the Brussels High-Level Conference, 26 January 2015, § 3.
The importance of co-operation between the Council of Europe and the European Union has also been highlighted in the reform process, in particular to ensure the effective implementation of joint programmes and coherence between their respective priorities. In this context, the HELP Programme has a joint programme called “HELP in the EU”, funded by both the EU and the Council of Europe, which aims to contribute to an increased protection of fundamental rights in the EU member States in a variety of specific areas through activities as well as training and training-of-trainers. The handbooks published jointly by the Court and the European Union Agency for Fundamental Rights (FRA) on European human rights law-related topics are a further example of a fruitful co-operation in this respect.

B. APPLICATIONS BEFORE THE EUROPEAN COURT OF HUMAN RIGHTS

I. Measures for dealing with the high case-load

1. Background

The concern about the high number of applications brought before the Court and the growing deficit between applications introduced and applications disposed of has been the central focus of the process of the reform of the Convention system from the outset. That situation was considered to cause damage to the effectiveness and credibility of the Convention and its supervisory mechanism. According to the Interlaken Declaration, additional measures were indispensable and urgently required in order to enable the Court to reduce the backlog of cases and to adjudicate new cases within a reasonable time.

---

92 Handbooks have been published on European non-discrimination law, on European law relating to asylum, borders and immigration, on European data protection law, on European law relating to the rights of the child and on European law relating to access to justice, see the Court’s website for links to these Handbooks.

93 See the Interlaken Declaration adopted at the High Level Conference on the Future of the European Court of Human Rights on 19 February 2010, points PP 7-9.
70. Prior to the start of the Interlaken process in 2010, on 31 December 2009 119,300 applications were pending before the Court. The number of pending cases had reached 151,600 on 31 December 2011 before decreasing significantly to 59,700 on 30 September 2019.\(^{94}\) As for the judicial formations before which applications were pending, while on 31 December 2009 44,400 applications were pending before a Chamber and 74,900 before a Committee or Single Judge as likely to be declared inadmissible,\(^ {95}\) on 30 September 2019 19,600 applications were pending before a Chamber (or Grand Chamber), 34,700 before a Committee and 5,400 before a Single Judge.\(^ {96}\)

71. Between end of 2009 and end of 2018, the number of incoming applications which have been allocated to a judicial formation every year has ranged from 40,500 (in 2015) to 65,800 (in 2013.)\(^ {97}\) While there is no clear trend, the number of applications allocated to a judicial formation has, as a general rule, decreased since 2014 compared to the previous years.\(^ {98}\) A significant number of the applications allocated to a judicial formation each year is identified as clearly inadmissible (between 51% in 2016 and 78% in 2017).\(^ {99}\)

2. Access to the Court and a sound administration of justice

72. It was repeatedly stressed by the States Parties in the course of the Interlaken process that it is necessary to examine the conditions of the applicants’ access to the Court and ensure a sound administration of justice in order to tackle the Court’s high case-load.\(^ {100}\)

---

\(^{94}\) See the Court Registry’s document on “The development of the Court’s case-load over ten years – Statistical data for the CDDH” of 27 February 2019, document CDDH(2019)08, point II.

\(^{95}\) See the European Court of Human Rights’ Analysis of Statistics 2009, p. 6.

\(^{96}\) See the European Court of Human Rights’ Analysis of Statistics 2018, p. 6; and for a more detailed analysis of the Court’s backlog chapter B.I.5.(a) below.

\(^{97}\) See document CDDH(2019)08, p. 4.

\(^{98}\) It has to be borne in mind, however, that the lower number of incoming cases allocated to a judicial formation is partly the result of a new approach to Rule 47 of the Rules of Court, which determines what applicants are required to do for their application to be allocated for judicial decision (see ECHR Analysis of Statistics 2014, p. 4).

\(^{99}\) See document CDDH(2019)08, point I.

\(^{100}\) See, inter alia, the Brussels Declaration, part B.1.a).
(a) Information on the scope of the Convention’s protection and the application procedure

73. It is not only in the Court’s, but also in potential applicants’ interest that the latter do not bring applications before the Court which do not have any prospects of success. The States Parties therefore stressed in the reform process that potential applicants should “have access to information on the Convention and the Court, particularly about the scope and limits of the Convention’s protection, the jurisdiction of the Court and the admissibility criteria”.101

74. In the course of the reform process, the Court updated and considerably expanded the information addressed notably to applicants and their representatives in these respects. On the web pages dedicated to “Applicants” on its website,102 it provides information on lodging an application, on how to make a valid application to the Court, including the formal requirements relating to the application form and the revised Rule 47 of the Rules of Court. It further provides basic information on the scope and limits of the protection the Court can provide, including questions of just satisfaction. As regards the admissibility criteria, the web pages provide an interactive “admissibility checklist” designed to allow potential applicants to check whether they satisfy the main admissibility criteria for lodging an application with the Court. Shortly after the Interlaken Conference, the Court further prepared, and subsequently updated, a “Practical Guide on Admissibility Criteria” intended mainly for lawyers who wish to bring a case before the Court103 and whose responsibility for providing the applicants with adequate information on the prospects of success of their applications has already been stressed by the CDDH.104 Furthermore, two videos on the admissibility conditions have been made available. This information is complemented by information on the procedure by which the Court examines an application, including a new State of Proceedings (SOP) search engine allowing anyone to find out what stage has been reached in the proceedings concerning an application.105

101 See for this summary the Brussels Declaration, part B.1.a).
102 See https://www.echr.coe.int/Pages/home.aspx?p=applicants&c=.
105 See on this search engine also “The Interlaken process and the Court, 2016 Report of 1 September 2016, § 22.
75. It is noteworthy that the applicants’ pages on the Court’s website containing all the information necessary to submit a valid application are available in at least one official language of each member State since 2014. In particular, key documents, such as the “Practical Guide on Admissibility Criteria” could be translated into other languages with the assistance of Governments and various other partners.

76. Likewise, the member States made considerable efforts over the last decade in order to ensure that information on the scope of the Convention’s protection and the application procedure is accessible to potential applicants. Most States Parties provide for information in the national languages and for links to the relevant pages on the Court’s and also the Council of Europe’s general websites on the websites of their Ministries of Justice or of Foreign Affairs. In a number of States, information on the Convention and the Court is presented in the national languages on several further national websites, including that of the Government Agent’s Office, national Bar Associations and/or National Human Rights Institutions.

(b) Change of procedural rules and practices

77. At the very outset of the reform process, the Interlaken Conference called upon the Committee of Ministers “to consider any additional measure which might contribute to a sound administration of justice and to examine in particular under what conditions new procedural rules or practices could be envisaged, without deterring well-founded applications.” In the course of the reform process, the Committee of Ministers, with the help of the CDDH, examined in detail a large number of measures to that effect; proposals accepted resulted, in particular, in the elaboration of Protocol No. 15 to the Convention. The Court, for its part, equally examined and adopted measures allowing it to better handle the incoming applications.

---

78. In order to better manage the influx of incoming applications, the Plenary Court amended the rules on the necessary contents of an individual application. The revised version of Rule 47 of the Rules of Court, which entered into force on 1 January 2014, was to facilitate the filtering and subsequent processing of applications by taking a stricter approach in interpreting what is a valid application. In brief, applicants have to fill in all fields of the Court’s new application form and append all documents necessary for the examination of the application.\footnote{111} If an applicant fails to comply with Rule 47, the application will not be allocated to a Court formation for decision (save for limited exceptions, see Rule 47 § 5).\footnote{112} Furthermore, under the revised Rule 47 § 6, the six-month time-limit under Article 35 § 1 of the Convention for lodging an application following the final national decision is only the date of dispatch of the complete application satisfying the requirements of Rule 47 (previously, the dispatch of a letter setting out the substance of the application had been sufficient to comply with the six-month period).\footnote{113}

79. The review of the impact of the revised Rule 47 showed that the procedure lightened the Court’s workload and facilitated the speedy processing of applications. Less of the incoming applications have been allocated to a judicial formation\footnote{114} and the better organised incoming applications on properly completed application forms, in which applicants have to present their case in a succinct manner, are easier to analyse and process\footnote{115}. The reform ultimately enabled the Court to decide on

\footnote{111}{See The Interlaken process and the Court, 2013 Report, document DD(2013)906, point 14; The Interlaken process and the Court, 2014 Report, document DD(2015)74, point 12; and the Report on the implementation of the revised rule on the lodging of new applications (Report on Rule 47) drawn up by the Court’s Registry (February 2015), part II.B.}

\footnote{112}{See on these exceptions in more detail the Report on the implementation of the revised rule on the lodging of new applications (Report on Rule 47) drawn up by the Court’s Registry (February 2015), part II.B.}

\footnote{113}{See The Interlaken process and the Court, 2014 Report, document DD(2015)74, point 12; and the Report on the implementation of the revised rule on the lodging of new applications (Report on Rule 47) drawn up by the Court’s Registry (February 2015), part II.C.}

\footnote{114}{See on this development in more detail the CDDH Report on “The longer-term future of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights” adopted on 11 December 2015, §§ 76 and 84. In 2014, some 23% of the new incoming applications failed to comply with the revised Rule 47 (see The Interlaken process and the Court, 2014 Report, document DD(2015)74, point 12).}

\footnote{115}{See the Report on the implementation of the revised rule on the lodging of new applications (Report on Rule 47) drawn up by the Court’s Registry (February 2015), part II.D.}
communication of applications to respondent Governments without the need to prepare a full-fledged statement of facts.\textsuperscript{116}

(ii) \textit{Procedural changes laid down in Protocol No. 15 to the Convention}

80. In order to give effect to certain provisions of the Brighton Declaration\textsuperscript{117} aimed at maintaining the effectiveness of the Convention system notably by changes in the procedure before the Court, the CDDH, on the instruction of the Committee of Ministers, elaborated a draft amending protocol to the Convention, future Protocol No. 15.\textsuperscript{118}

81. That Protocol provides, in particular, for the following changes to the Convention regarding access to Court and a sound administration of justice: It shortens the time-limit under Article 35 § 1 of the Convention within which an application must be lodged with the Court after the final national decision. It further facilitates the rejection of an individual application as inadmissible where the applicant has not suffered a significant disadvantage (Article 35 § 3 (b) of the Convention) by removing the current second condition for such a rejection, namely that the case must have been duly considered by a domestic tribunal.\textsuperscript{119} Moreover, Article 30 of the Convention is amended so as to remove the right of the parties to object to the relinquishment of a case by a Chamber in favour of the Grand Chamber. This aims at accelerating the proceedings before the Court in cases which raise a serious question affecting the interpretation of the Convention or a potential departure from existing case-law and therefore ultimately need to be decided by the Grand Chamber.\textsuperscript{120}

\textsuperscript{116} See paragraph 116 below.
\textsuperscript{117} See in particular paragraphs 15.a), 15.c) and 25.d) of the Brighton Declaration.
\textsuperscript{118} See for the works of the CDDH, of its Committee of experts on the reform of the Court (DH-GDR) and its Drafting Group B (GT-GDR-B) on the future Protocol No. 15, inter alia, the Explanatory Report to Protocol No. 15, Introduction, §§ 1-4, and the report of the 76th CDDH meeting, document CDDH(2012)R76, §§ 3-6, 9 and 12 with further references, Addendum III and Addendum IV. See for the expected effects of Protocol No. 15, inter alia, the CDDH Report on "The longer-term future of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights" adopted on 11 December 2015, § 85.
\textsuperscript{119} See for this proposal the CDDH Final Report on measures requiring amendment of the European Convention on Human Rights, 15 February 2012, CM(2012)39-add1 (= CDDH(2012)R74 Addendum I), §§ 24-27 and Appendix III, Section 4; and for further proposals regarding the application of the de minimis non curat praetor ("the court is not concerned with trivial matters") rule also CDDH(2012)R74 Addendum II, § 8 iv.
\textsuperscript{120} See the website of the Council of Europe Treaty Office for the text of Protocol No. 15 and the Explanatory Report to Protocol No. 15.
82. The effects of this Protocol on the efficient functioning of the Convention system cannot be assessed yet as this Protocol, opened for signature on 24 June 2013, still has not yet entered into force.\textsuperscript{121}

(iii) Further envisaged procedural changes which were not retained

83. The CDDH, on the request of the Committee of Ministers, examined a large number of further possible measures with the effect of regulating access to the Court and ensuring a sound administration of justice, in particular with the aim of addressing the problem of the very large number of clearly inadmissible applications lodged with the Court.\textsuperscript{122} Following a thorough examination of these measures, they were finally not retained.

84. The Izmir Declaration had invited the Committee of Ministers, in particular, to continue to examine the issue of charging fees to applicants for lodging an application with the Court.\textsuperscript{123} The CDDH elaborated a report examining the practicality and utility of different models of a system of fees. While noting that fees could discourage applicants from lodging clearly inadmissible applications, the analysis disclosed administrative and budgetary consequences of such a system as well as a risk of inequity between applicants and of a discriminatory deterrence of well-founded applications.\textsuperscript{124} The Court itself had declared its opposition to fees on both principled and practical grounds.\textsuperscript{125}

85. The CDDH further examined whether making representation by a lawyer compulsory from the outset of the proceedings before the Court could dissuade clearly inadmissible applications and increase their quality. The CDDH concluded, however, that it was not proved that such measure would produce the desired effect and found that without provision of legal aid for persons of insufficient means, it would impact the right of individual application. There would also be substantial budgetary implications for the member States which do not currently provide legal aid to applicants for lodging an application with the Court.126 The Court had equally explained being opposed to introducing compulsory legal representation on principled and practical grounds.127

86. Moreover, the CDDH examined the proposal to impose a pecuniary sanction in “futile” cases where an applicant repeatedly submitted applications which are clearly inadmissible. However, the CDDH noted that such a sanction would cause additional work to the Court and its payment could not be directly enforced by it. Moreover, it was not established that such applications, which were dealt with quickly, were very numerous.128

87. As for the proposal to confer on the Court a discretion to decide which cases to consider in order to make its workload more manageable and to allow it to focus on highest priority cases, the CDDH noted that this would significantly restrict the right of individual application and presupposed a high level of national implementation of the Convention which was not so far universally realised.129

88. The CDDH also examined proposals to introduce new admissibility criteria for applications before the Court, and notably the introduction of a criterion relating to cases properly considered by national courts. An application would be inadmissible if it were substantially the same as a matter that had already been examined by a domestic tribunal applying Convention rights, unless that tribunal had manifestly erred in its interpretation or application of the Convention rights or the application raised a serious question affecting interpretation or application of the Convention. The CDDH considered that his emphasised the subsidiary nature of the judicial control conducted by the 129 See in more detail the CM(2012)39-add1 (= CDDH(2012)R74 Addendum I), cited above, §§ 47-50 and Appendix IV, Section 3; and for the Court’s preference of adopting, if it were necessary, a test under which, where there is well-established case-law, the Court would only take up an application for a full Chamber decision on its merits if respect for human rights within the meaning of Article 37 of the Convention required it to do so, the Preliminary opinion of the Court, in preparation for the Brighton Conference, cited above, document DD(2012)205, § 34.

Court. However, this criterion would considerably restrict the applicant’s access to the Court without decreasing the Court’s workload.\(^{130}\)

89. The CDDH finally considered the proposal of a so-called “sunset clause” under which applications which were not communicated to the respondent Government for observations before expiry of a fixed period could be automatically struck off the Court’s list of cases. The CDDH noted that this may free resources to deal with the more serious cases. However, it was stressed both within the CDDH and by the Court that such an automatic strike-out of cases without any judicial examination would be incompatible with the principle of access to justice and the right to individual petition.\(^{131}\) The further proposal to introduce a so-called “representative application procedure” before the Court is addressed below in the context of measures regarding repetitive cases.\(^{132}\)

(c) Protection from reprisals

90. Access to the Court and a sound administration of justice warrant that applicants and their representatives who lodge applications with the Court are granted protection from reprisals if necessary. The Secretary General has put in place a specific procedure on Human Rights Defenders interacting with the Council of Europe under his direct oversight in May 2017. The mechanism shall assist human rights defenders who allegedly have been subject to reprisals for their interaction with the Council of Europe.\(^{133}\) Protection may further be accorded by the Court in the context of a specific application pending before it, notably by granting a request for interim measures.\(^{134}\)

---

\(^{130}\) See in more detail the CM(2012)39-add1 (= CDDH(2012)R74 Addendum I), cited above, §§ 28-32 and Appendix III, Section 5. The Court equally expressed doubts that such an, or any further admissibility criterion would ease its workload, see the Preliminary opinion of the Court, in preparation for the Brighton Conference, cited above, document DD(2012)205, §§ 31-32.

\(^{132}\) See chapter B.I.5.(c) below.

\(^{133}\) See for more details the webpages of the Secretary General on the Privat Office Procedure on Human Rights defenders and on its revision in August 2019; as well as the Report by the Secretary General for the Ministerial Session in Helsinki, 16-17 May 2019, Ready for future challenges – reinforcing the Council of Europe, p. 17.

\(^{134}\) See for the scope of interim measures under Rule 39 of the Rules of Court and examples of cases in which such measures have been applied the Factsheet on Interim Measures of January 2019 prepared by the Court Registry’s Press Unit.
91. The protection of human rights defenders in general further lies at the heart of the mandate of the Council of Europe Commissioner for Human Rights and plays a role, in particular, in the Commissioner’s country monitoring.\(^{135}\) Likewise, the Parliamentary Assembly has notably adopted several Resolutions and Recommendations aimed at protecting human rights defenders in Council of Europe member States, including applicants and lawyers lodging applications with the Court.\(^{136}\)

3. Filtering of applications

92. “Filtering” is the expression used to mean the process of identifying and issuing decisions on clearly inadmissible applications. Under Protocol No. 14, this is done by Single Judges, assisted by experienced members of the Registry known as non-judicial rapporteurs.\(^{137}\) Proposals aimed at improving filtering are intended to address the problem of the backlog of applications pending before Single Judges, and to allow the Court’s judges to devote all, or at least most of their working time to more important cases.\(^{138}\)

93. The Interlaken and Izmir Conferences, on the one hand, invited the Court to put in place, in the short term, a mechanism within the existing bench likely to ensure effective filtering. On the other hand, they invited the Committee of Ministers to examine, as a long-term measure, the setting up of a more efficient filtering mechanism within the Court which would, if necessary, require amendments to the Convention.\(^{139}\)

94. The Court thereupon set up a new filtering mechanism in 2011, namely a Filtering Section, which centralises the handling of the incoming cases from several of the highest case-count countries. It carries out an immediate sifting of applications in order to direct them to the appropriate judicial formation, that is to a Single Judge, Committee or Chamber. Moreover, the Filtering Section deals immediately with almost all cases

\(^{135}\) See for more details the dedicated webpages on Human Rights Defenders on the website of the Commissioner for Human Rights.

\(^{136}\) See, in particular, Parliamentary Assembly Resolution 2225(2018) and Recommendation 2133(2018), both entitled Protecting human rights defenders in Council of Europe member States, adopted on 26 June 2018, with further references to related work.

\(^{137}\) See Article 27 of the Convention and Rule 18A of the Rules of Court.

\(^{139}\) See the Interlaken Declaration, point 6, Action Plan, point C.6.c), and Implementation of the Action Plan, point 5; and the Izmir Declaration of 26/27 April 2011 of the High Level Conference on the Future of the European Court of Human Rights, Follow-up plan, point C.1-3, and Implementation, points 2.a. and 3.
identified for treatment by a Single Judge. By this centralisation of resources and streamlining of working methods, the Court managed to speed up considerably the processing of cases and to reduce the backlog of unexamined cases.¹⁴⁰ The streamlined working methods were subsequently extended to all Sections within the Court. As a consequence, while at the beginning of September 2011 more than 101,000 applications had been pending at the Single-Judge level,¹⁴¹ the backlog of this category of cases, as envisaged by the Court, was cleared by 2015 and the Court has from then on dealt only with new incoming Single-Judge cases on a “one in/one out basis” within a few months.¹⁴²

95. The CDDH, on request of the Committee of Ministers, further proposed three options for a new filtering mechanism, all of which would require an amendment of the Convention, in its Final Report on measures requiring amendment of the European Convention on Human Rights of 15 February 2012. First, experienced Registry lawyers could be authorised to take final decisions on clearly inadmissible applications. Second, filtering could be entrusted to a new category of judge. Third, the two options could be combined, with specific members of the Registry being given the competence to deal with applications which have been provisionally identified as clearly inadmissible for purely procedural reasons under Article 35 §§ 1 and 2 of the Convention and a new category of filtering judge created to deal with cases provisionally identified as inadmissible under Article 35 § 3.¹⁴³

96. The CDDH, however, did not only note the budgetary consequences which the involvement of additional judges would have. It considered that it was unlikely that any new filtering mechanism, which would require the entry into force of an amending Protocol to the Convention, could come into effect or, at least, still have any substantive impact by the envisaged date of 2015 for clearance by the Court of its backlog of Single-Judge cases.¹⁴⁴ No such filtering mechanism had been set up subsequently.

¹⁴⁰ See in more detail the Filtering Section progress report (2011) drawn up by the Court’s Registry.
4. The order of dealing with applications – clear priority policy

97. Already prior to the start of the Interlaken process the Court adopted a priority policy in June 2009 for determining the order in which incoming cases are to be dealt with. In accordance with Rule 41 of the Rules of Court, as amended, the Court, at least in principle, moved away from the oldest-case-first-approach and treats the most important and urgent cases in the first place. The Court established seven categories of cases, ranging from urgent cases concerning vulnerable applicants (Category I) to clearly inadmissible cases dealt with by a Single Judge (Category VII). Following a review of the priority policy, the Court made some amendments to the priority categories in May 2017.\(^{145}\)

98. The States Parties repeatedly welcomed the pursuit of the priority policy, which had helped the Court to better manage its case-load by devoting a substantial proportion of its legal resources to the most important and serious cases.\(^{146}\) The CDDH supported, in particular, the \(^{145}\) See on the Court’s priority policy “Securing the long-term effectiveness of the supervisory mechanism of the European Convention on Human Rights: the Court’s action in 2018-2019”, document CDDH(2019)25, § 26; and the CDDH Report on “The longer-term future of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights” adopted on 11 December 2015, § 76 v). An explanation of the Court’s (revised) priority policy can be found on the Court’s internet site: (http://www.echr.coe.int/Documents/Priority_policy_ENG.pdf ). Cases in priority category I are urgent applications covering in particular risks to life or health of the applicant, cases where the applicant is deprived of his/her liberty as a direct consequence of the alleged violation of his/her Convention rights, other circumstances linked to the personal or family situation of the applicant, particularly where the well-being of a child is at issue, and cases in which interim measures under Rule 39 of the Rules of Court have been ordered. Cases in category II cover applications raising questions capable of having an impact on the effectiveness of the Convention system (in particular a structural or endemic situation that the Court has not yet examined, notably cases subject to the pilot-judgment procedure) or applications raising an important question of general interest (in particular a serious question capable of having major implications for domestic legal systems or for the European system). Category III applications on their face raise as main complaints issues under Articles 2, 3, 4 or 5 § 1 of the Convention (“core rights”), irrespective of whether they are repetitive, and cases which have given rise to direct threats to the physical integrity and dignity of human beings. Category IV comprises potentially well-founded applications based on other Articles. Applications in category V raise issues already dealt with in a pilot/leading judgment (“well-established case-law cases”). Category VI applications are cases identified as giving rise to a problem of admissibility. Category VII finally covers applications which are manifestly inadmissible.

---

\(^{146}\) See the Izmir Declaration of 26/27 April 2011 of the High Level Conference on the Future of the European Court of Human Rights, point 2; the Brighton Declaration of 19/20 April 2012 of the High Level Conference on the Future of the European Court of Human Rights, § 20 a) i); and the Copenhagen Declaration of 12/13 April 2018 of the High-Level Conference on “Continued Reform of the European Court of Human Rights Convention System – Better balance, improved Protection”, § 50.
considerable evolvement of the Court’s policy and case-management in the recent years and the move towards a more systemic, problem-oriented approach. Nevertheless at a later stage the Court was encouraged, in co-operation and dialogue with the States Parties, to continue to explore all avenues to manage its caseload, following a clear policy of priority.

5. Measures for dealing efficiently with specific categories of cases

(a) General analysis of the Court’s backlog of cases

99. Following up to the Copenhagen Declaration, the Committee of Ministers invited the CDDH to include in its present report “a comprehensive analysis of the Court’s backlog of cases, identifying and examining the causes of the influx of cases from the States parties in order to identify the most appropriate solutions at the level of the Court and the States parties”. This shall serve as a basis for analysing the prospects of the Court obtaining a balanced case-load. The CDDH has conducted preparatory work in this respect on the basis, in particular, of statistical data provided by the Court’s Registry specifically for the purposes of the present analysis, as well as the extensive statistical information provided by the Court on its internet site.

100. The number of pending cases has been set out above.

---

148 See the Copenhagen Declaration, cited above, § 50.
149 See the Copenhagen Declaration, cited above, § 54 a).
151 See the Copenhagen Declaration, cited above, § 54 a).
154 See https://www.echr.coe.int/Pages/home.aspx?p=reports&c= and, in particular, the yearly Analysis of statistics (most recently the European Court of Human Rights' Analysis of statistics 2018) containing an overview of the statistics of the respective year and both general and country-specific information on the development of the Court’s case-load.
155 See paragraphs 70 and 71.
101. As regards the development of the Court’s caseload in respect of the different member States, the statistics show that the case-load is not evenly distributed between them. On 31 December 2009, 61.7% of the total number of applications pending before the Court was lodged against 5 of the 47 member States.\textsuperscript{156} That situation had not substantially changed subsequently. On 31 December 2018 68.7% of the pending applications were lodged against the same 5 of the 47 member States.\textsuperscript{157}

102. As for the Court’s total case-load by priority category,\textsuperscript{158} on 31 December 2018 1.5% of the total of 56,350 applications pending were in priority category I, 0.4% in category II, 34.8% in category III, 30.9% in category IV, 23.8% in category V and 8.5% in categories VI-VII.\textsuperscript{159} As a consequence, the challenge of reducing the backlog of non-repetitive Chamber cases (category IV) and “priority cases” falling in the top three categories (notably category III) remains.\textsuperscript{160}

103. An analysis of the main subject-matters of the applications pending before the Court discloses that on 1 January 2019 five subject-matters alone accounted for 54% of all applications pending before a judicial formation.\textsuperscript{161} These subject-matters comprise, on the one hand, systemic problems in a small number of member States, namely conditions of detention, non-enforcement of domestic courts’ judgments and length of proceedings before the domestic courts. On the other hand, they cover specific events which had resulted in a large number of applications lodged with the Court, namely issues linked to situations of conflict between member States and the Turkish events of July 2016. On 1 January 2009 these subject matters (in so far as the events underlying the applications had already occurred) already represented 45% of the \textsuperscript{156} The majority of pending cases were against the Russian Federation (28.1%), Turkey (11.0%), Ukraine (8.4%), Romania (8.2%) and Italy (6.0%), see the European Court of Human Rights’ Analysis of Statistics 2009, p. 8.

\textsuperscript{157} The majority of pending cases were against the Russian Federation (20.9%), Romania (15.1%), Ukraine (12.9%), Turkey (12.6%) and Italy (7.2%), see the European Court of Human Rights’ Analysis of Statistics 2018, p. 8; and the Press Release on the annual press conference of the Court of 24 January 2019.

\textsuperscript{158} See on the Court’s priority policy and the different priority categories chapter B. I.4. above.

\textsuperscript{159} See the European Court of Human Rights’ Analysis of Statistics 2018, p. 9.

\textsuperscript{160} See the European Court of Human Rights’ Analysis of Statistics 2018, p. 5; see also France’s contribution in the Compilation of the contributions received from the member States, document CDDH(2019)12.

\textsuperscript{161} In this part, the pending applications (51,600) do not take into account the applications pending before a Single Judge (4,750).
applications pending before a judicial formation. While the number of applications concerning the length of judicial proceedings or the non-execution of domestic courts’ judgments have initially risen and then decreased in the period from 2009 until 2018, the number of applications concerning conditions of detention and that of applications arising from situations of conflict between States has considerably risen in the same period and the events in Turkey in July 2016 have led to a new category of main subject-matters of pending applications.

104. These figures show that while the solution of some wide-spread problems could be achieved during that period, other systemic problems emerged. Moreover, it is evident from the statistics that the number of applications regarding such problems decreased substantially once an effective domestic remedy addressing the issue had been put in place in the State concerned. Furthermore, exceptional events such as those in Turkey in July 2016 – which, on 31 December 2018, represented 6% of the total number of applications pending before a judicial formation – can rapidly have a substantive impact on the Court’s case-load.

105. As regards the Court’s backlog of cases pending before the different judicial formations, the above statistics show that the large category of incoming clearly inadmissible Single-Judge-cases lodged with the Court, which are processed as they come in, now accounts for less than 10% of the applications pending before a judicial formation. As for the proportion of more than 50% of the total number of pending cases which have been allocated to a Committee, the statistics show that a substantive part of these applications result from systemic problems related to very few subject-matters (currently notably conditions of detention potentially in breach of Article 3 of the Convention) generating a larger number of applications against a relatively small number of member States. As for the proportion of some 40% of the total number of cases which are pending before a Chamber (or Grand Chamber), these cover potentially well-founded applications which are not covered by well-

162 See document CDDH(2019)08, p. 5.
164 In particular, the number of applications concerning conditions of detention has substantially decreased in respect of Italy and Hungary once effective domestic remedies addressing this issue had been put in place. As for pending applications concerning non-execution of domestic courts’ judgments, there has been a significant decrease in the applications pending against the Russian Federation following the introduction of a domestic remedy. Likewise, States including Bulgaria, Greece, the Russian Federation and Turkey have seen the number of applications concerning the length of judicial proceedings drop once a domestic remedy was put in place, see document CDDH(2019)08, pp. 6-9.
established case-law. This percentage depends, however, on the qualification of cases. Respondent Governments may indeed consider a higher number of applications as not being covered by well-established case-law (WECL) than the Court, especially in case the so-called broader WECL is applied. On that basis, the latter group of applications may be even larger. They are, as a rule, not suitable for grouped or more summary treatment and therefore necessitate considerably more resources.

(b) Measures regarding clearly inadmissible (Single Judge) cases

106. As shown above, despite the significant number of incoming applications which are identified as clearly inadmissible Single Judge cases, the stock of these applications has been substantially decreased, from 74,900 (2009) and to over 100,000 (2011) to 4,750 (2018). This has been made possible by the use of the potential of the Single-Judge procedure introduced by Protocol No. 14, by the setting up of the Filtering Section and by a streamlining of the working methods within the Court in respect of this category of cases, including a highly automated workflow system developed by the Registry’s IT Department. The CDDH’s finding end of 2015 that concerning the initial challenge of the backlog of clearly inadmissible cases, no further measures appear necessary, can thus be confirmed.

(c) Measures regarding repetitive (Committee) cases

107. Since the entry into force of Protocol No. 14 to the Convention, three-judge Committees may not only take strike-out and inadmissibility decisions, but may also render judgments on the merits if the underlying question in the case is already the subject of well-established case-law of the Court (see Article 28 § 1 of the Convention). As regards the backlog of such repetitive cases, the CDDH had expected in its 2015 report on the longer-term future of the Convention system that this backlog would be cleared until 2018. However, as shown above, at the end of 2018 more than 50% of the pending cases were allocated to a Committee.

165 See paragraph 111 below.
166 See in more detail, including on the functioning of the Court’s workflow system, document CDDH(2019)25, §§ 22 and 33-36; and The Interlaken process and the Court, 2016 Report, cited above, § 7.
167 See the CDDH Report on “The longer-term future of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights”, cited above, §§ 76 iii) and 130 i).
substantive part of these (priority and non-priority) applications result from systemic problems related to very few subject matters. While the number cases disclosing systemic problems relating to length of judicial proceedings and non-execution of domestic courts’ judgments which existed at the outset of the Interlaken process indeed decreased considerably, the number of cases relating to new systemic problems (notably conditions of detention), to repetitive applications concerning situations of conflict between States or to the exceptional events in Turkey in July 2016 increased.

108. The Court has taken several measures to tackle the backlog of repetitive cases. Encouraged by the Committee of Ministers’ Resolution Res(2004)3 on judgments revealing an underlying systemic problem, the Court developed, in its case-law, a pilot-judgment procedure which, following a call to that effect in the Interlaken declaration, was codified in Rule 61 of the Rules of Court in 2011. This procedure allows the Court to identify in a judgment both the nature of a structural or systemic problem which has given or may give rise to similar applications as well as the type of remedial measures which the Contracting Party concerned is required to take at the domestic level by virtue of the operative provisions of the judgment. While the Contracting Party is in the process of taking the necessary steps, the Court may decide to adjourn its consideration of other applications stemming from the same cause. If the remedial measures adopted are sufficient, the Court may terminate its examination of the (usually numerous) other applications by, for example, declaring them inadmissible for non-exhaustion of new domestic remedies or striking out the related applications under Article 37 of the Convention.

109. It is noteworthy in this context that on one exceptional occasion the Court, faced with the ineffective execution of a pilot judgment decided, however, no longer to continue the examination of pending follow-up cases (which at the time accounted to almost one third of all the repetitive applications pending before the Court). Given that such follow-up cases involved problems of a financial and political nature which could only be 169 Resolution Res(2004)3 was adopted by the Committee of Ministers on 12 May 2004 at its 114th session.

170 See the Interlaken Declaration, Action Plan, point 7.b).
adequately addressed between the State concerned and the Committee of Ministers, the Court found that it was for the Committee of Ministers to ensure that the pilot judgment was fully implemented by general measures and appropriate relief to individual applicants.172

110. In accordance with the Brighton Declaration,173 the CDDH further examined whether a so-called “representative application procedure”, by which the Court could determine a small number of representative applications from a group of applications in which the same Convention violation is alleged against the same respondent State was advisable. It considered that this was not the case. It found that very numerous similar applications were a problem for the Court, but in terms of resources rather than the availability of procedural responses, notably the pilot judgment procedure.174

111. Furthermore, in autumn 2014 the Court put in place the so-called WECL (well-established case-law) procedure, backed up by an advanced IT workflow system, which enables it to deal with these applications in a simplified and rapid manner. A fast-track version of the WECL procedure was developed in 2015 which speeded up the processing of groups of applications by using increased automation of the drafting process. Cases are communicated without asking for observations but generally with a friendly settlement proposal; in case of its rejection, the Government can propose a unilateral declaration acknowledging a violation of the Convention and undertaking to provide redress.175 Moreover, in June 2017 the Plenary Court took a policy decision aimed at increasing its capacity by defining more broadly which applications can be considered as covered by “well-established case-law” and thus falling within the competence of Committees instead of Chambers (so-called “broader WECL” cases; see Articles 28 and 29 of the Convention).176 The notion of “well-established case-law” thus refers not only to case-law in which the particular issue has been addressed, in relation to the State

172 See Burmych and Others v. Ukraine (striking out) [GC], nos. 46852/13 and Others, 12 October 2017, concerning the non-execution of the pilot judgment in the case of Yuriy Nikolayevich Ivanov v. Ukraine (no. 40450/04, 15 October 2009) regarding a systemic problem of non-enforcement or delayed enforcement of domestic court decisions, combined with the absence of effective domestic remedies in this respect. See also document CDDH(2019)25, §§ 7-8.
173 See the Brighton Declaration, cited above, § 20.d).
175 See for this procedure, inter alia, document CDDH(2019)25, § 30.
176 See on the broader WECL cases and procedure in more detail document CDDH(2019)25, §§ 31-32.
concerned, by a Grand Chamber judgment, or – at Chamber level – by a pilot judgment or a leading judgment or a recent final Chamber judgment concerning the specific issue in the State in question. Under the new interpretation, there can also be well-established case-law where there are at least three recent and relevant judgments concerning different States. All WECL procedures led to repetitive applications being processed more speedily. However, when combining the broader WECL with another, recently introduced, working method of the Court (IMSI), the need for reclassification of a case as non-WECL could appear after the Court has received full information on facts. In addition, practical difficulties already experienced by member States with these procedures are being addressed within the regular meetings between the Court and the Government Agents.

112. The States Parties, under the supervision and with the assistance of the Committee of Ministers, for their part, successfully put in place a number of effective domestic remedies to address systemic problems at the national level, in line with Recommendation Rec(2004)6 of the Committee of Ministers to member States on the improvement of domestic remedies. The above statistics demonstrate that whenever this occurred, the number of repetitive applications in this respect decreased substantially. In this connection it was important that the Court upheld its practice of adjourning pending follow-up cases and referring the applicants to a newly created effective domestic remedy once it was put in place. They further show that the introduction of a domestic compensatory remedy, in order to be effective, must be accompanied by the necessary reforms to prevent the Convention violation in question and by sufficient budgetary funding. Moreover, wherever there was an increase in the adoption of friendly settlements and unilateral

---

178 See on these procedures and their effect on the number of cases examined, inter alia, the CDDH Report on “The longer-term future of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights”, cited above, §§ 76 iv); document CDDH(2019)25, §§ 28-30; The Interlaken process and the Court, 2016 Report, cited above, § 8; and the Response of the Court to the “CDDH report containing conclusions and possible proposals for action on ways to resolve the large number of applications arising from systemic issues identified by the Court”, cited above, § 10.
179 See paragraph 116 below.
180 The Recommendation Rec(2004)6 of the Committee of Ministers to member States on the improvement of domestic remedies was adopted by the Committee of Ministers at its 114th session on 12 May 2004.
declarations, this helped decreasing the Court’s backlog.\textsuperscript{183} Practical problems for member States due to the number of cases communicated at the same time are being addressed at the regular meetings between the Government Agents and the Court.

113. It results from the foregoing that the backlog of repetitive applications pending before a Committee remains an issue and must be addressed by all the actors in the Convention system. It has to be welcomed in general that the Court continuously took a number of initiatives during the past years aimed at optimising the procedures before it, which led to a substantial reduction of the backlog. The Court should, in close dialogue and co-operation notably with the Government Agents, continue striving to optimise its working methods in order to handle this group of cases. It is important to guarantee, at the same time, that the parties’ rights in the proceedings are not curtailed by the simplified procedures and that the quality of the Court’s judgments and decisions is maintained.

114. The same, regarding optimising the working methods, holds true for the Department for the Execution of Judgments of the Court. Subject to the necessary resources, the latter should carry out further targeted assistance programmes aimed at helping States Parties to implement Court judgments disclosing systemic or large-scale problems. The States Parties, in particular, should ensure a better implementation of the Convention at the national level, including by a speedy execution of the Court’s judgments. They should notably ensure that effective domestic remedies are created as soon as possible where systemic problems arise as the latter often generate large numbers of repetitive cases clogging up the system which constitute a main challenge to the Convention system.\textsuperscript{184}

\textsuperscript{183} See, for instance, the situation in respect of Italy, where cases concerning the non-execution of judgments granting compensation for excessive length of proceedings – a domestic remedy introduced by the so-called Pinto law – first accumulated and now decrease as a result of friendly settlements concluded by the parties in a high number of applications, see document CDDH(2019)08, p 8.

(d) Measures regarding non-repetitive (Chamber and Grand Chamber) cases

115. As for the proportion of some 40% of the total number of pending cases which are pending before a seven-judge Chamber (or the seventeen-judge Grand Chamber), these cover potentially well-founded (priority and non-priority) applications which are not covered by well-established case-law.

116. The Court, in order to speed up the communication stage of Chamber applications, introduced a so-called immediate simplified (IMSI) communication procedure in March 2016. Instead of communicating applications to the respondent Government with a detailed statement of facts, the Court gives only an indication of the subject-matter of the case and puts questions to the parties; it further forwards the application form and necessary documents. In addition to sending their observations, Governments are requested to present the facts of the case; applicants are invited to reply to both the Government’s observation and their statement of facts. The increased involvement of the parties in the judicial preparation of cases is viewed as an aspect of the notion of shared responsibility which underlies the Convention system.\(^{185}\) It seems that this procedure, which may also have the effect of encouraging the parties to conclude a friendly settlement, led to Chamber cases being completed by a judgment or decision more speedily.\(^{186}\) It subsequently also covered “broader WECL” cases.\(^{187}\) Changes in the drawing up of the statement of facts may lead to a risk that cases are communicated that would not have been communicated under the normal procedure and that there is a need to re-classify them at a later stage. As indicated above, this and practical difficulties already experienced by member States are being dealt with in dialogue between the Government Agents and the Court.

117. It is further recalled that following the Copenhagen Declaration\(^{188}\) the Ministers’ Deputies had invited the CDDH to cover, in the present report, also proposals on how to facilitate the prompt and efficient \(^{185}\) Compare in this respect the Explanatory Report to Protocol No. 15 to the Convention, §§ 7-9, available on the website of the Council of Europe’s Treaty Office.

\(^{186}\) Cases communicated under the IMSI procedure were terminated by a judgment or decision in 16 months on average, compared to 28 months under the standard communication procedure (over the period from 2016 to June 2019), see document CDDH(2019)25, § 5.

\(^{188}\) See the Copenhagen Declaration, cited above, § 54 b).
handling of cases which the parties were prepared to settle by means of a friendly settlement or unilateral declaration.\textsuperscript{189}

118. The CDDH notes in this context that from January 2019, the Court introduced a dedicated, non-contentious phase of the proceedings in order to facilitate friendly settlements and unilateral declarations. In the non-contentious phase, a concrete friendly settlement proposal will, where appropriate, be made on communication of the application to the respondent Governments in every case unless a case raises novel issues or for any specific reason it may be inappropriate to propose a friendly settlement. If no friendly settlement is concluded or the case not struck off the list following a unilateral declaration by the Government, the parties are invited to exchange observations in a second, contentious phase.\textsuperscript{190} This separation of the two phases of the proceedings makes the conclusion of friendly settlements more attractive as Governments no longer have to start drafting observations and (in the IMSI procedure) a statement of facts at the same time as conducting friendly settlement negotiations. The CDDH considers that dispute resolution by friendly settlements is an important part of every judicial system and is waiting with great interest for an analysis of the functioning of the procedure and its impact on the number of friendly settlements concluded after its one-year test period.\textsuperscript{191}

119. Furthermore, a so-called “project-focused approach” has been developed within the Registry, entailing a greater specialisation of Registry lawyers in different areas of Convention law in order to process cases more efficiently.\textsuperscript{192}

\textsuperscript{190} See in detail on this procedure the Court Registry’s document on “Encouraging resolution of the Court’s proceedings through a dedicated non-contentious phase of the proceedings”, submitted to the CDDH for the purposes of the present report (document CDDH(2018)R90, § 27), document CDDH(2019)09.

\textsuperscript{192} See for more details the CDDH Report on “The longer-term future of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights”, cited above, §§ 81 and 89; and The Interlaken process and the Court, 2016 Report, cited above, § 12.
120. It follows from the foregoing that the backlog of Chamber cases which are particularly important for the development of the Convention system as they often raise new issues regarding the interpretation and application of the Convention, must be considered as one of the principal challenges the Convention system is currently facing. These are, as a rule, not suitable for grouped or more summary treatment and therefore necessitate considerably more resources if the quality of the judgments and decisions delivered in this group of cases is to be ensured.193

(e) Measures regarding cases related to inter-State disputes

121. It is recalled that following the Copenhagen Declaration,194 the Ministers’ Deputies had invited the CDDH to include in the present report also “proposals on how to handle more effectively cases related to inter-State disputes, as well as individual applications arising from situations of conflict between States, without thereby limiting the jurisdiction of the Court, taking into account the specific features of these categories of cases, inter alia regarding the establishment of facts”.195

122. As shown above, the number of inter-State and also individual applications resulting from situations of conflict between member States has been rising in recent years. On 1 January 2019, more than 8,500 individual applications, representing 17% of the total number of applications pending before the Court, were individual applications arising out of situations of inter-State conflict.196 As acknowledged in the Copenhagen Declaration, situations of conflict and crisis in Europe pose challenges to the Convention system.197

123. It is the Court’s present practice, where an inter-State case is pending, that individual applications raising the same issues or deriving from the same underlying circumstances are, in principle and in so far as 194 See the Copenhagen Declaration, cited above, § 54 c).

195 See the 1317th meeting of the Deputies, decisions following the 128th Session of the Committee of Ministers held in Helsingør (Denmark) on 17-18 May 2018, cited above.
197 See the Copenhagen Declaration, cited above, § 45.
practicable, not decided before the overarching issues stemming from the inter-State proceedings have been determined in the inter-State case.\textsuperscript{198}

124. The CDDH, at its 91st meeting (18-21 June 2019), had an in-depth exchange of views on the topic\textsuperscript{199} on the basis of a document prepared by its Bureau,\textsuperscript{200} contributions made by the member States prior to this meeting\textsuperscript{201} and a report by the Plenary Court on “Proposals for a more efficient processing of inter-State cases” submitted to the CDDH.\textsuperscript{202} The CDDH did not yet adopt a text in this regard.\textsuperscript{203} It takes the view that these issues require a more in-depth examination. It therefore considers it useful that the CDDH / DH-SYSC conduct work facilitating proposals to ensure the effective processing and resolution of cases relating to inter-State disputes as well as individual applications arising from situations of conflict between States, without thereby limiting the jurisdiction of the Court, taking into account the specific features of these categories of cases, inter alia regarding the establishment of facts in the next biennium.

6. The organisational structure of the Court

(a) Examined measures changing the Court’s organisational structure

125. Notably in the first years of the Interlaken process, a number of measures which would amend the organisational structure of the Court were analysed closely. Following a call by successive high-level Conferences,\textsuperscript{204} the CDDH was charged by the Committee of Ministers with examining whether a simplified procedure for amending provisions of the Convention relating to organisational matters could be introduced with the aim of making the Convention system more flexible, possibly by setting up a Statute for the Court or a new provision in the Convention. The CDDH concluded that it would not be opportune to elaborate a draft Protocol introducing a simplified amendment procedure, notably in the \textsuperscript{198} See the Copenhagen Declaration, cited above, § 45.

\textsuperscript{200} See document CDDH-BU(2019)R101 Addendum of 12 June 2019, §§ 61-91 and Appendices I and II.
\textsuperscript{201} See document CDDH(2019)12.
\textsuperscript{202} See for the redacted version of the report adopted by the Plenary of the Court on 18 June 2018 document CDDH(2019)22.
\textsuperscript{204} See the Interlaken Declaration, Action Plan, point 12; the Izmir Declaration, cited above, Implementation, point 2.c); and the Brighton Declaration, cited above, § 37.
light of constitutional difficulties with which some member States would be faced in applying such a procedure.\textsuperscript{205}

126. The CDDH further examined the procedure for the amendment of the Rules of Court and the possible “upgrading” to the Convention of certain provisions thereof, notably regarding interim measures, the pilot judgment procedure and unilateral declarations. As regards the procedure for amendment of the Rules of Court, which under Article 25 d) of the Convention falls within the competence of the Plenary Court, several proposals were made to allow for a better consultation of the States Parties regarding such amendments.\textsuperscript{206} In reply, in November 2016 the Court incorporated the principle of consultation into the Rules of Court. Rule 116 (former Rule 111) since then provides that the Contracting Parties, but also organisations with experience in representing applicants and relevant Bar associations will be consulted on any proposal to amend Rules that directly concern the conduct of proceedings.\textsuperscript{207} It cannot yet be assessed how the consultation process foreseen in Rule 116 will take place in the future and to what extent the comments received are taken into account. As regards the ‘upgrading’ to the Convention of certain provisions of the Rules of Court, the CDDH was divided on the interest in doing so.\textsuperscript{208}

127. The CDDH also repeatedly examined the question of whether the appointment of additional judges to the Court should be made possible (by an amendment to the Convention).\textsuperscript{209} There was no consensus on this issue, neither on the necessity of appointing additional judges nor on the competences such judges should exercise, that is, whether they should deal with filtering, repetitive or possibly also Chamber cases. It was notably argued that in view of the considerable structural and \textsuperscript{207} See also European Court of Human Rights, Annual Report 2016, pp. 10-11.

\textsuperscript{209} See for calls to examine this issue the Interlaken Declaration, Action Plan, point 7.c); and the Brighton Declaration, cited above, § 20.e).
budgetary consequences of such a measure, other approaches should be exhausted first.²¹⁰

(b) The Court’s resources

128. Successive high-level Conferences have welcomed the changes made to the working methods within the Registry of the Court which have allowed better management of budgetary and human resources,²¹¹ and have acknowledged the importance of retaining a sufficient budget for the Court to solve present and future challenges.²¹²

129. The Court received highly appreciated additional support in the form of temporary secondments of national judges, prosecutors and other highly qualified legal experts to its Registry. In addition to a professional training dimension, described above,²¹³ these secondments have helped the Court in dealing with its backlog of cases.²¹⁴

130. Furthermore, a special account was created for the Court and the funds provided by donor Governments have permitted the temporary recruitment notably of some additional Registry lawyers dealing with Chamber cases.²¹⁵

131. The Court repeatedly confirmed that it was continuously innovating and adapting its working methods in order to improve its case-processing, but would ultimately need additional human resources in order to come to grips with the backlog of cases.²¹⁶ The CDDH has already concluded in 2015 that “the issue of resources is key in responding to many of the challenges above and pursuing/implementing

²¹⁰ See, in particular, the CDDH report on the question of whether or not to amend the Convention to enable the appointment of additional judges to the Court of 29 November 2013, document CM(2013)176 (= CDDH(2013)R79 Addendum III), in particular §§ 15-16 and with a summary of the previous work on the topic in §§ 1-14. See for further, more far-reaching proposals regarding the organisational structure of the Court which were not retained by the CDDH also the CDDH Report on “The longer-term future of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights”, cited above, §§ 126-129.
²¹¹ See the Izmir Declaration, cited above, point F.3., following up to the Interlaken Declaration, Action Plan, point 10.
²¹² See the Copenhagen Declaration, cited above, § 52.
²¹³ See chapter A.I.2. above.
²¹⁵ See The Interlaken process and the Court, 2016 Report, cited above, § 31.
²¹⁶ See The Interlaken process and the Court, 2016 Report, cited above, § 29; and also document CDDH(2019)25, §§ 44-45.
the areas of action identified”. It further stated that “[i]t is up to the member States to ensure that the Organisation has sufficient resources to perform its tasks, including the efficient functioning of the Court, and that there is proper alignment between the Organisation’s desired functions and the resources allocated to it”. It stressed that “in view of the positive results of the Court’s reforms so far, the challenge of clearing the backlog of non-repetitive priority and non-priority cases may entail allocating additional resources and more efficient working methods rather than introducing a major reform” and pointed to the importance of ensuring the appropriate quality of examination of all applications also when clearing this backlog. Having regard to the development, in particular, of the backlog of (priority and non-priority) Chamber cases, the issue of resources remains pertinent.

II. Measures to guarantee the authority of the Court and of its case-law

1. The selection and election of judges of the Court

132. Successive high-level conferences as well as the Court itself have underlined the importance for the authority of the Court of ensuring that it is composed of judges of the highest calibre. As regards the procedure for the selection of judges, the Committee of Ministers adopted Guidelines on the selection of candidates for the post of judge at the European Court of Human Rights in 2012, which it updated in 2014. It also established an Advisory Panel of Experts on Candidates for Election

218 Ibid.
220 See the Interlaken Declaration, cited above, Action Plan, point E.8.a); the Izmir Declaration, cited above, point 7; the Brighton Declaration, cited above, §§ 21-22 and 25; and the Copenhagen Declaration, cited above, §§ 55-62.
221 See the Preliminary opinion of the Court, in preparation for the Brighton Conference, cited above, document DD(2012)205, § 29; the Comment from the Court on the report of the CDDH on the longer-term future of the Convention system, cited above, § 5; the Court’s Opinion on the CDDH report on the Advisory Panel of 15 April 2014, in particular § 4; and also document CDDH(2019)25, §§ 39-40.
222 See the Guidelines of the Committee of Ministers on the selection of candidates for the post of judge at the European Court of Human Rights of 29 March 2012, as updated on 26 November 2014; and also the CDDH Report on “The longer-term future of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights”, cited above, § 103.
as Judge to the European Court of Human Rights end of 2010, the functioning of which the CDDH reviewed in 2013. Moreover, as to the election procedure, the Parliamentary Assembly set up a new general Committee on the Election of Judges to the European Court of Human Rights in order to strengthen the procedure.

133. In a follow-up to the CDDH Report on the longer-term future of the Convention system, the CDDH adopted, in 2017, a Report on the selection and election of judges of the European Court of Human Rights. It examined in detail the selection procedure and the election process of judges at the Court as well as the conditions for their employment and working conditions at the Court and the question of ad hoc judges, and concluded that there was room for improvement regarding all four themes.

134. As part of the follow-up to the Copenhagen Declaration, the Committee of Ministers considered, in co-operation with the Parliamentary Assembly, and on the basis of the said 2017 CDDH report, the entire process of selecting and electing judges to the Court and adopted in January 2019 decisions aiming at ensuring that the most qualified and competent candidates are elected. In addition, the CDDH was charged with examining “questions relating to the situation of judges of the European Court of Human Rights after the end of their mandate, mentioned in paragraphs 154 and 159 of the 2017 CDDH Report on the process of selection and election of judges of the European Court of Human Rights”. The CDDH stresses the importance to safeguard the Court’s independence by preventing disguised reprisals against former judges of the Court after the end of their mandate. It considers that a Declaration of the Committee of Ministers underlining the importance of preventing such reprisals would be desirable to address this risk. The 224 See the CDDH Report on the review of the functioning of the Advisory Panel of experts on candidates for election as judge to the European Court of Human Rights, document CDDH(2013)R79 Addendum II; see also the Court’s Opinion on the CDDH report on the Advisory Panel of 15 April 2014.

---

225 See for further information the relevant PACE webpages.

229 See the 1317th meeting of the Deputies, decisions following the 128th Session of the Committee of Ministers held in Helsingør (Denmark) on 17–18 May 2018, cited above.
CDDH further stresses that the recognition of service as a judge of the Court after the end of the mandate was equally important in order to guarantee both the attractiveness of the Court for highly qualified candidates and the independence of the Court, which may be affected if a judge had to fear not finding an adequate post in his/her country following the expiry of his or her term of office. The CDDH therefore considers it desirable to equally reflect this issue in the above-mentioned Declaration of the Committee of Ministers, respecting, at the same time, the diversity of the constitutional systems in the member States.\textsuperscript{230} Mention could be made of the good practices in respect of the recognition of service of judges at the Court as they emanate from the comprehensive research report on the “Recognition of service in international courts in national legislation”\textsuperscript{231} provided by the Court’s Registry.\textsuperscript{232}

135. Finally, by the entry into force of Protocol No. 15 a new paragraph 2 will be inserted in Article 21 of the Convention which is to modify the conditions of service of the post of judge. Candidates must be less than 65 years of age at the date by which the list of three candidates has been requested by the Parliamentary Assembly. This modification aims at enabling highly qualified judges to serve their full nine-year term of office and thereby to reinforce the consistency of the membership of the Court.

2. The clarity and consistency of the Court’s case-law

136. Clear and consistent case-law is a prerequisite for an effective national implementation of the Convention, facilitates the execution of the Court’s judgments and helps reducing the Court’s case-load.\textsuperscript{233} High-level conferences accordingly were unanimous in stressing the importance thereof.\textsuperscript{234}

\textsuperscript{231} See document CDDH(2019)07 of 8 February 2019.
\textsuperscript{234} See the Interlaken Declaration, cited above, preamble; the Izmir Declaration, cited above, point 5 and Follow-up plan, point F.2.; the Brighton Declaration, cited above, §§ 12, 14-15, 23 and 25; the Brussels Declaration, cited above, Action Plan, point A.1.; and the Copenhagen Declaration, cited above, §§ 27 and 29-32.
137. On a general level, emphasis was laid throughout the Interlaken process on the importance of an interpretation of the Convention reflecting the respective roles of the Court and the national authorities in the Convention system and their shared responsibility in securing the Convention rights. On the one hand, it was stressed that, under the Court’s case-law, the States Parties, in accordance with the principle of subsidiarity, have the primary responsibility to secure the Convention rights. In doing so, they further enjoy a margin of appreciation, subject to the supervisory jurisdiction of the Court. On its entry into force, Protocol No. 15 to the Convention will add a reference to the principle of subsidiarity and the doctrine of the margin of appreciation to the Preamble of the Convention. On the other hand, it was noted that the Court could have more recourse to providing clearer general interpretative guidance concerning the understanding of the Convention rights and clearer indications of which elements constituted the direct sources of the finding of a violation.

138. Moreover, inconsistencies in the Court’s case-law notably between (seven-judge) Chambers had to be prevented. The (seventeen-judge) Grand Chamber had an important role to play in this respect. In order to reinforce that role, Protocol No. 15 to the Convention shall remove the right of the parties to a case to object to relinquishment of jurisdiction over it by a Chamber in favour of the Grand Chamber (see Article 30 of the Convention). The work of the Jurisconsult (see Rule 18B of the Rules of Court) and of the Registry’s Research and Library Division under his supervision were considered as further appropriate means to address this issue.

235 See, in particular, the Brighton Declaration, cited above, § 12.a) and b); and the CDDH Report on “The longer-term future of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights”, cited above, §§ 17 (including definitions), 96 and 99.

236 See the CDDH Report on “The longer-term future of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights”, cited above, §§ 114, 131 iv) and 169.iv); and the Comment from the Court on the report of the CDDH on the longer-term future of the Convention system, cited above, § 7.

237 See the Brighton Declaration, cited above, § 25.d); and the CDDH Report on “The longer-term future of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights”, cited above, §§ 20, 113 and 131 iii), for further not-retained proposals in this regard see ibid., §§ 121-125. See equally the Preliminary opinion of the Court, in preparation for the Brighton Conference, cited above, document DD(2012)205E, §§ 13-16 and the change in Rule 72 of the Rules of Court, as of 6 February 2013, stipulating that the Chamber shall relinquish jurisdiction in favour of the Grand Chamber where the resolution of a question raised in a case before the Chamber might have a result inconsistent with the Court’s case-law.

238 See the CDDH Report on “The longer-term future of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights”, cited above, § 113; for the Court’s view see Comment from 139. The efforts to reduce the Court’s case-load may further threaten the clarity and quality of the reasoning in judgments and decisions. The Court has recently decided to address this issue by means of a new Manual on the drafting of judgments and decisions. Moreover, following the Brussels Declaration the Court, in the interest of clarity of its case-law, provides brief reasons also for the inadmissibility decisions of a Single Judge. As of June 2017, applicants, instead of a decision letter, receive a decision of the Court in one of its official languages and signed by a single judge, accompanied by a letter in the applicant’s national language. The decision includes, in many cases, reference to specific grounds of inadmissibility. IT tools have been developed within the Court’s Registry in order to limit the impact of this change on the Court’s case-processing capacity. This measure taken by the Court also contributes to reinforcing the overall coherence of the international system of human rights protection by reducing the risk that the same case is subsequently examined by another international body.

3. The Convention in the European and international legal order

140. In its 2015 report on “The longer-term future of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights”, the CDDH had identified the place of the Convention in the European and international legal order as one of the areas which were decisive for the longer-term effectiveness and viability of the Convention system. It has elaborated a report on this topic, covering the challenge of the interaction between the

the Court on the report of the CDDH on the longer-term future of the Convention system, cited above, § 8. See for the creation, within the Registry, of an internal Knowledge Sharing Platform under the supervision of the Jurisconsult document CDDH(2019)25, § 18.

239 See the Interlaken Declaration, cited above, preamble; and the CDDH Report on “The longer-term future of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights”, cited above, § 111; for further not-retained responses outside the existing structures in this respect, notably the institution of an Advocate General, see ibid., §§ 118-120.

241 See the Brussels Declaration, cited above, Action Plan, point A.1.c); and also the CDDH Report on “The longer-term future of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights” adopted on 11 December 2015, §§ 111 and 131 iii). See for the grounds given by the Court not to give reasons for decisions indicating interim measures and for refusals of requests for referral of a case to the Grand Chamber (see the Brussels Declaration, cited above, Action Plan, point A.1.d)) The Interlaken process and the Court, 2016 Report, cited above, §§ 16-21 and Appendix II.

Convention and other branches of international law, including international customary law, the challenge of the interaction between the Convention and other international human rights instruments to which the Council of Europe member States are parties and the challenge of the interaction between the Convention and the legal order of the EU and other regional organisations. The aim of this work is the preservation of the efficiency of the Convention system against risks of fragmentation of the European and international legal space in the field of human rights protection, stemming from diverging interpretations.\textsuperscript{245}

141. An important element for the place of the Convention in the European legal order and the coherence of human rights protection in Europe is the question of the accession of the European Union to the Convention. Article 6 § 2 of the Treaty on European Union, as amended by the Lisbon Treaty, provides that the EU shall accede to the ECHR. Along with that, the provision on the EU’s accessions to the ECHR is envisaged in Article 59 paragraph 2 of the Convention, as amended by Protocol No. 14. Successive high-level Conferences unanimously stressed the importance of a speedy EU accession to the Convention.\textsuperscript{246} The CDDH, in co-operation with the European Commission, elaborated a draft Accession Agreement setting out the modalities of the EU’s participation in the ECHR system. In December 2014 the Court of Justice of the European Union (CJEU), in its Opinion 2/13, found, however, that this draft Accession Agreement was not compatible with EU law. Possible solutions to the various objections raised by the CJEU in its Opinion are currently being examined by the EU institutions.\textsuperscript{247} This is a pressing matter. If accession does not happen soon, there is a risk that two separate bodies of case law will develop with regard to human rights – one in the European Court of Justice and one in the European Court of

\textsuperscript{246} See the Interlaken Declaration, cited above, preamble; the Izmir Declaration, cited above, Follow-up plan, point I.; the Brighton Declaration, cited above, § 36; the Brussels Declaration, cited above, point 15; and the Copenhagen Declaration, cited above, § 63.

\textsuperscript{247} See for more details on the accession negotiations as well as the risks of a delayed EU accession of the Convention, inter alia, the CDDH Report on “The longer-term future of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights”, cited above, §§ 177-181, 187 ii) and 193; and the CDDH Report on the place of the European Convention on Human Rights in the European and international legal order, chapter III 2.b.iii., 2.c. and 2.d.
Human Rights. This would create a new and detrimental dividing line in Europe. The CDDH encourages the Committee of Ministers to reiterate its political support for the accession and to take such action as may be appropriate to avoid any further delay in achieving this important objective.

III. Dialogue of the Court with the actors in the Convention system

142. The Interlaken process as such did not only entail a substantive reinforcement of the exchanges between the Court and the State Parties. Successive high-level Conferences stressed that an increased constructive and continuous dialogue of the Court with the actors in the Convention system was indispensable to enable all to take their respective parts in their shared responsibility in the implementation of the Convention.

1. Dialogue with the national courts and with other international courts and bodies

143. The Court conducts, first and foremost, a judicial dialogue with the national courts. Such dialogue takes place, in particular, through the Court’s judgments, which may expressly respond to the interpretation of the Convention by the domestic courts in their judgments; the CDDH considered that this dialogue could be further developed. The Court further pursues a dialogue with the national supreme and/or constitutional courts.

248 See Report by the Secretary General for the Ministerial Session in Helsinki, 16-17 May 2019.
251 See Comment from the Court on the report of the CDDH on the longer-term future of the Convention system of February 2016, § 7, in which the cases of Lambert and Others v. France [GC], no. 46043/14, ECHR 2015; Animal Defenders International v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 48876/08, ECHR 2013; Kronfeldner v. Germany, no. 21906/09, 19 January 2012; and Al-Khawaja and Tahery v. the United Kingdom [GC], nos. 26766/05 and 22228/06, ECHR 2011 were cited as examples. See also Preliminary opinion of the Court, in preparation for the Brighton Conference, adopted by the Plenary Court on 20 February 2012, document DD(2012)205, § 27.
courts in regular working visits. Moreover, the Court’s President meets systematically with senior members of the judiciary during his official visits to States. The Court’s judges deliver training sessions notably to national judges in their home States. The Court also continues to receive many groups of judges each year in the context of professional training programmes.

144. In order to reinforce the dialogue with national courts, the Court in October 2015 further launched a Superior Courts Network (“SCN”) under the responsibility of its Jurisconsult. The SCN, the creation of which had been welcomed by successive Conferences as well as by the CDDH, developed significantly and in November 2019 numbered 86 superior courts from 39 States. It serves to exchange information on Convention case-law and related matters. The Court, on a dedicated website (the SCN Intranet), provides member superior courts with access to material not in the public domain such as the Jurisconsult’s analytical notes on new decisions and judgments as well as research reports on a range of Convention subjects and allows them to ask the Jurisconsult specific questions on Convention case-law. The SCN member courts, for their part, contribute to the Court’s comparative law studies as a valued source of knowledge about domestic law and practice.

145. A further additional channel for an increased dialogue with the national superior courts was provided by the entry into force of Protocol No. 16 to the Convention on 1 August 2018, which has also been called “the Protocol of dialogue”. This Protocol allows the highest courts of 257 See the Brussels Declaration, cited above, Action Plan, A.1.b); and the Copenhagen Declaration, cited above, § 37.b).

---

260 See the speech of the then President of the Court, Dean Spielmann, at the solemn hearing of the Court on the occasion of the opening of the judicial year, Strasbourg, 30 January 2015, in: “Dialogue between judges, European Court of Human Rights, Council of Europe, 2015”, p. 44; and document CDDH(2019)25, § 13.
those Contracting Parties which ratified the Protocol to request the Court to give advisory opinions on questions of principle relating to the interpretation or application of the rights laid down in the Convention or its Protocols. It thereby does not only serve to prevent breaches of the Convention at the national level, as shown above, but also to foster the dialogue between the Convention mechanism and the domestic legal orders in the context of concrete cases pending before the respective national courts.

146. In addition to its ongoing dialogue with the national courts, the Court resumed its dialogue in regular meetings with other international courts and bodies, which the CDDH had deemed being important, in particular with the Court of Justice of the European Union, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights and the Human Rights Committee of the United Nations.

2. Dialogue with the member States’ representatives

147. Throughout the Interlaken process, dialogue between the Court and notably its President and Registrar, and the States Parties was held at the different high-level conferences organised since 2010 in Interlaken, Izmir, Brighton, Brussels and most recently Copenhagen, to which the Plenary Court contributed by written Opinions, as well as further high-level expert conferences and seminars on the Convention system.

148. As for dialogue regarding proceedings before the Court, the Copenhagen Conference, in particular, identified third-party interventions in these proceedings (see Article 36 §§ 1 and 2 of the Convention and Rule 44 of the Rules of Court) as an important way for the States Parties to engage in a dialogue with the Court. The submission of observations

---

261 See chapter A.II.1.(d) above.
265 See on the Court’s contributions to and participation in the different high-level conferences in detail the Court’s webpages on the Reform of the Court; and on the participation in further conferences, including the Seminar on the occasion of the 20th anniversary of the New Court organised by the Finnish Presidency of the Committee of Ministers on 26 November 2018, document CDDH(2019)25, § 21 and CDDH(2018)R90, §§ 34-35.
266 See the Copenhagen Declaration, cited above, §§ 34 and 39-40.
by States Parties other than the respondent State in cases before the Court which have been identified as likely to lead to a judgment that may have implications for these States Parties permits a wider legal debate and helps the Court to form a broader understanding of the context of a case and the human rights issues at stake.\textsuperscript{267} State interventions may foster a wider implementation of the Court’s judgments at national level and in some instances, prompt the Court to clarify its own case-law regarding legal issues of importance to Contracting States. State Parties were encouraged to make more use of third-party interventions and to increase their coordination on them; the Court, for its part, was invited to encourage third-party interventions by providing appropriate information on the status and content of cases which could raise questions of principle.\textsuperscript{268} Practical problems stemming in particular from the use of the IMSI procedure that may hinder third-party interventions are being discussed on a regular basis in the meetings between the Court and the Government Agents.

149. Successive high-level conferences have also stressed the importance of an ongoing dialogue between the Court and the Government Agents who represent the States in the proceedings before the Court.\textsuperscript{269} Meetings between the judges of the Court and members of its Registry and the Government Agents have become more frequent during the Interlaken process and currently take place twice a year. In the light of recently evolving working methods of the Court which put in practice the shared responsibility for the Convention system in the procedure before the Court (see, inter alia, the immediate simplified communication (IMSI) procedure and the non-contentious phase of the proceedings), it is indeed essential that exchanges on the experiences regarding those new working methods and procedures take place regularly and that the Government Agents are consulted when new

\begin{footnotesize}
\begin{itemize}
\item \textsuperscript{267} See document CDDH(2019)25, § 21; and the keynote speech by the then President of the Court, Guido Raimondi, at the 2017 High-Level Expert Conference in Kokkedal, Denmark, on “2019 and Beyond: Taking Stock and Moving Forward from the Interlaken Process”, 22–24 November 2017.
\item \textsuperscript{268} See already the CDDH Final Report on measures that result from the Interlaken Declaration that do not require amendment of the Convention, document CDDH(2012)R74 Addendum II, § 8 v); the Copenhagen Declaration, cited above, §§ 39-40; and also the findings of the Breakout session on increasing third-party interventions by member States at the 2017 High-Level Expert Conference in Kokkedal, Denmark, cited above.
\item \textsuperscript{269} See, in particular, the Brighton Declaration, cited above, point B. 12.c) iii); and the Copenhagen Declaration, cited above, §§ 37.c).
\end{itemize}
\end{footnotesize}
working methods are considered.\textsuperscript{270} Furthermore, members of the Court’s Registry have met with the Government Agent and other relevant interlocutors in the context of specific pilot judgment procedures to discuss ways to achieve compliance with the Convention in relation to a systemic problem.\textsuperscript{271}

150. The Court and the Committee of Ministers further engage in a dialogue regarding the supervision of the execution of the Court’s judgments where the Court in its judgments, often by reference to Article 46 of the Convention, gives indications of relevance for the execution process. The Committee of Ministers, for its part, gives an account of the progress made or of problems encountered in the execution process in its decisions and interim resolutions, which allows the Court to react to developments.\textsuperscript{272} The Committee of Ministers further regularly invites the President of the Court for an exchange of views, for which the Court prepares a report regarding the reforms it has implemented or is giving consideration to as part of the Interlaken process.\textsuperscript{273} The Court has been represented in the meetings of the CDDH and its drafting groups, mandated by the Committee of Ministers, in which numerous issues regarding the reform of the Convention system have been examined, by a member of its Registry, contributed to them by written submissions and has regularly issued a view on the final CDDH reports at the invitation of the Committee of Ministers.\textsuperscript{274}

\textsuperscript{270} See on these exchanges and the project to set up, in a further step, a working party of Government Agents and the Registry on co-operation in procedural matters, document CDDH(2019)25, § 19.

\textsuperscript{271} See the Response of the Court to the “CDDH report containing conclusions and possible proposals for action on ways to resolve the large number of applications arising from systemic issues identified by the Court” of 20 October 2014, § 14; and The Interlaken process and the Court, 2014 Report, document DD(2015)74, point 9.

\textsuperscript{272} See for further exchanges via different channels, between the Court’s Sections and the Department for the Execution of Judgments, for instance the Response of the Court to the “CDDH report containing conclusions and possible proposals for action on ways to resolve the large number of applications arising from systemic issues identified by the Court” of 20 October 2014, § 13.

\textsuperscript{274} See, inter alia, the Comment from the Court on the report of the CDDH on the longer-term future of the Convention system of February 2016, in particular § 1; and the Response of the Court to the “CDDH report containing conclusions and possible proposals for action on ways to resolve the large number of applications arising from systemic issues identified by the Court”, cited above, ibid.
3. Dialogue with applicants’ representatives and civil society and National Human Rights Institutions

151. All high-level conferences have stressed the importance of consulting notably with civil society and National Human Rights Institutions in the process of the reform of the Convention system in particular in order to ensure an effective national implementation of the Convention.\textsuperscript{275} The Court meets on a regular basis with those who represent applicants in the proceedings before it, that is the Council of Bars and Law Societies of Europe (CCBE) and civil society organisations.\textsuperscript{276} In line with the CDDH’s call to the Court to consider possibilities of co-operation with organisations of legal professions in order to improve the information the latter provide to potential applicants on the prospects of success of an application,\textsuperscript{277} the Court also co-operates with the CCBE in the publication and regular updating of a practical guide for lawyers.\textsuperscript{278}

\textsuperscript{275} See the Interlaken Declaration, Implementation, point 2; the Izmir Declaration, cited above, Implementation, point 6; the Brighton Declaration, cited above, §§ 4 and 20.g); the Brussels Declaration, cited above, preamble and Action Plan, B.2.a), f) and j); and the Copenhagen Declaration, cited above, §§ 14, 18 and 33.

\textsuperscript{276} See, for instance, the Response of the Court to the “CDDH report containing conclusions and possible proposals for action on ways to resolve the large number of applications arising from systemic issues identified by the Court”, cited above, § 14; and The Interlaken process and the Court, 2014 Report, document DD(2015)74, point 9. See for proposals made by applicants’ representatives, in particular, the CCBE Proposals for reform of the ECHR machinery of 28 June 2019 submitted to the CDDH. Moreover, the Court now consults organisations with experience in representing applicants regarding a proposal to amend its Rules which directly concern the conduct of proceedings (Article 116 of the Rules of Court, see paragraph 126 above).

\textsuperscript{278} See the applicants’ webpages on the Court’s internet site for the Guide entitled “European Court of Human Rights – Questions and answers for lawyers”. See for more details on the provision of information on the Convention system to applicants already chapter B.I.2.a) above.
C. THE EXECUTION OF THE JUDGMENTS OF THE EUROPEAN COURT OF HUMAN RIGHTS

152. The Interlaken Declaration stressed that full, effective and rapid execution of the final judgments of the Court is an indispensable element of the Convention system. In view of the critical situation at the time, with notably an increase of the number of pending cases by some 1,000 cases a year since 2005, the Interlaken Declaration expressed the clear conviction that additional measures were indispensable and urgently required in order to ensure full and rapid execution and the effectiveness of its supervision by the Committee of Ministers. This crucial aspect of the Convention system has since been an important part of the Interlaken process.

I. Ensuring domestic capacities for the rapid execution of judgments

1. General developments

153. The achievements of the Interlaken process must be seen in the light of the situation as it stood at the beginning of the process. A major achievement of the pre-Interlaken process was the development of an efficient framework for the integration of the Convention and for the judgments of the Court, in particular those directed against the State itself, in national legal systems. Much was also done to improve the situation, notably in the 1990s and 2000s with the incorporation of the Convention into domestic law also in all dualist States, with the result that the Committee of Ministers could note at the Rome Conference in 2000 that the Convention had direct effect in almost all member States and in the series of Recommendations to member States adopted in 2004 that the Convention was now part of domestic law in all member States.

154. As regards the judgments of the Court against the State concerned, efforts were deployed both at national and Council of Europe level to ensure the direct effect of these judgments in national legal practice so that they could be used directly by national courts, 279 See the Interlaken Declaration, point 7.

280 See the Interlaken Declaration, cited above, PP 9.
282 See a list of the recommendations in the 2017 Annual Report of the Committee of Ministers on the supervision of the execution of judgments and decisions of the European Court of Human Rights (Annual Report on execution of judgments), footnote 2.
prosecutors and other decision-makers in order to speedily adapt their practices to the Convention requirements. References to these efforts also became frequent in the Committee of Ministers’ final resolutions and simplified the supervision process. Dissemination and publication of the relevant Court judgments could thus, if the problem revealed by the violation found only related to domestic practices, be the only execution measures deemed necessary. A report from the Committee of experts for the improvement of procedures for the protection of human rights set up by the Council of Europe (DH-PR) to the Rome Conference in 2000 confirmed that the development of the direct effect of the Court’s judgments greatly helped to speed up execution. In this vein, efforts were subsequently engaged also to improve the publication and dissemination of the Court’s judgments – notably through the Recommendation of the Committee of Ministers Rec(2002)13 to member States on the publication and dissemination in the member States of the text of the European Convention on Human Rights and the case-law of the European Court of Human Rights.

155. Developments in the course of the Interlaken process have built on these achievements and have notably aimed at reinforcing the status of the Convention, improving domestic remedies and improving further the domestic capacity for the rapid execution of the Court’s judgments.

156. The Committee of Ministers’ supervision of judgments continues, however, to demonstrate, as do the findings of the Court, that violations established still frequently relate to matters covered by an already existing well-established case-law from the Court, although developed against other States, which, if it had been taken into account in due time by the national judge, prosecutor or police, could have avoided many [284] This has also been regularly highlighted in the Annual Reports, see, for instance, the 2017 Annual Report, Appendix 6, § 13.

[286] The introduction of a right of individual petition to the Turkish Constitutional Court in 2012 to ensure an effective remedy capable of breaking the ever increasing trend of applications to Strasbourg (see the 2013 Annual Report of the Committee of Ministers on the supervision of the execution of judgments and decisions of the European Court of Human Rights, p. 176) is one example, the interpretation by the Italian Constitutional Court in 2011 introducing a right to the reopening of criminal proceedings in order to give effect to the judgments of the Court (see the Italian Constitutional Court’s judgment no. 113 of 04/04/2011) is another.
violations. The necessity of ensuring that the general principles established in the Court’s relevant case-law are taken into account to prevent unnecessary applications is urgent. The Interlaken process has also continuously stressed the necessity of training of law officials in this regard. This consideration appears also to underlie the increasing trend by the Court to consider as WECL (well-established case-law) cases also cases where the well-established case-law has been developed against another State (so-called broader WECL cases, see above).

2. Recommendation CM/Rec(2008)2

157. In order to support the on-going developments, the Committee of Ministers adopted in 2008 Recommendation CM/Rec(2008)2 on efficient domestic capacity for rapid execution of judgments of the European Court of Human Rights.

158. In the course of the Interlaken process the implementation of this recommendation has been given considerable attention. A very first general stocktaking of practices was carried out in Tirana in December 2011. The recommendation quickly became an important source of inspiration and the CDDH engaged a new follow-up leading to the conclusion that there was at that stage no need for additional recommendations but rather for a continued implementation of those already made and to that end the CDDH published a guide of good practices in 2017.

159. Key responses to the calls made in the recommendation, most developed during the Interlaken process, have been the acceptance of the necessity of rapidly establishing action plans for the execution process, the connected necessity of a national coordinator,

---

287 See e.g. the 2010 Annual Report of the Committee of Ministers on the supervision of the execution of judgments of the European Court of Human Rights, Remarks by the Director General of Human Rights and Legal Affairs, § 8.
288 See chapter B.I.2.(c) above.
289 Recommendation CM/Rec(2008)2 on efficient domestic capacity for rapid execution of judgments of the European Court of Human Rights, adopted by the Committee of Ministers on 6 February 2008 at the 1017th meeting of the Ministers’ Deputies.
290 See more information about the Round Table on “Efficient domestic capacity for rapid execution of judgments of the European Court of Human Rights” in Tirana, 15-16 December 2011, at: https://www.coe.int/en/web/execution/tirana-domestic-capacity-for-rapid-execution.
improvements in the publication and dissemination of the Court’s case-law and also of relevant Committee of Ministers decisions, the development of the information channels with the Committee of Ministers and improved parliamentary involvement.

160. As regards the obligation to rapidly submit action plans, to the extent possible with a time-table, it was accepted by the States in 2010 as part of the Committee of Ministers’ new working methods.\textsuperscript{292} This requirement has been crucial, especially as under the new working methods action plans should be presented as soon as possible and in any event not later than six months after the Court’s judgment.

161. Action plans have in general been timely submitted, even if in a number of cases with some delay.\textsuperscript{293} The responses foreseen in such situations, mainly reminder letters and increased contacts, have in almost all cases proved sufficient to ensure the presentation of the action plans required. The percentage of action plans delivered any one year only after the sending of a reminder letter has largely remained the same throughout the whole Interlaken process, i.e. between 20-25\% without any major trend emerging.\textsuperscript{294}

162. The quality of the action plans has globally improved in the course of the Interlaken process. Even if the level of progress is difficult to measure, the presentation of the action plans has been harmonised and efforts have increased to include all relevant data, including wherever possible a tentative time-line.

163. Among the reasons for this progress figure the putting in place of improved coordination structures among State authorities capable of rapidly gathering relevant domestic decision-makers and the improved communication with the Council of Europe Secretariat, notably the Department for the Execution of Judgments (DEJ). Most countries have \textsuperscript{292} See the decisions taken during 1100th CM-DH meeting, 2 December 2010, Item e) on “Measures to improve the execution of the judgments of the European Court of Human Rights, Proposals for the implementation of the Interlaken Declaration and Action Plan.

\textsuperscript{293} See the Annual Reports of the Committee of Ministers on the supervision of the execution of judgments and decisions of the European Court of Human Rights, available at: https://www.coe.int/en/web/execution/annual-reports; and the CDDH report on measures taken by the member States to implement relevant parts of the Brussels Declaration, document CM(2019)149, §§ 100-102.

\textsuperscript{294} See the Annual Reports of the Committee of Ministers on the supervision of the execution of judgments and decisions of the European Court of Human Rights, available at: https://www.coe.int/en/web/execution/annual-reports, notably the summary in the 2018 Annual Report, p. 67.
today nominated a coordinator, most frequently the Agent of the Government before the Court, responsible for obtaining necessary information and engage necessary concertations/negotiations. A number of training activities have also been organised via the DEJ295 together with the presentation of a general guide (as part of the vade-mecum mentioned in Recommendation (2008)2 to assist execution).296

164. Moreover, in reply to calls made by successive high-level Conferences to consult with civil society on effective means to implement their action plans,297 several States Parties engaged in a dialogue with the National Human Rights Institutions (NHRIs) already during the preparation of action plans and reports. It recalled that NHRIs can also make submissions to the Committee of Ministers under Rule 9.2 of the Rules of the Committee of Ministers for the supervision of the execution of judgments and of the terms of friendly settlements.298 States have further reported to hold meetings or to establish, where appropriate, permanent bodies to discuss the execution of judgments involving executive and judicial authorities as well as members of parliament and associating, where appropriate, representatives of NHRIs and civil society.299 Some members States have also informed about measures taken to speed up the submission of action plans, interim information and action reports and to increase the clarity as to the respective roles and obligations of the relevant stakeholders in the execution process.

165. The importance of guides as to State and Committee of Ministers practice in execution matters is evident in the preparation of action plans. The Guide to good practice on the implementation of Recommendation (2008)2 has appeared also in other contexts, notably to help overcome the many problems which may arise when paying just satisfaction. The corresponding memorandum on “Monitoring of the payment of sums awarded by way of just satisfaction: an overview of the Committee of 295 See, for example, the Round table on “Action plans and reports in the twin-track supervision procedure”, Strasbourg, 13-14 October 2014 – press statement available on the DEJ website – “Newsroom”.

296 Also available on the DEJ website, notably via the above page.
297 See the Interlaken Declaration, cited above, Action Plan, Implementation, point 2; the Izmir Declaration, cited above, Implementation, § 6; and the Brussels Declaration, cited above, Implementation of the Action Plan, point 5.
298 See the CDDH report on measures taken by the member States to implement relevant parts of the Brussels Declaration, document CM(2019)149, § 57; See also, the Rules of the Committee of Ministers adopted by the Committee of Ministers on 10 May 2006 at its 964th Session, as amended on 18 January 2017 at its 1275th meeting.
299 See the CDDH report on measures taken by the member States to implement relevant parts of the Brussels Declaration, document CM(2019)149, § 80.
Ministers’ present practice”\(^{300}\) is presently being updated. This will allow to consider the possibility of its upgrading as suggested by the CDDH in the above-mentioned Guide.

166. The very positive experiences as regards the usefulness of this memorandum, and also of the different guides to good practices developed by the CDDH itself, underline the urgency of producing a more comprehensive vade-mecum on the execution process as suggested in Recommendation (2008)2.

167. As regards the follow-up to the action plans, including the effectiveness of subsequent dialogue and transmission of information on the implementation of action plans adopted, payment of just satisfaction or other measures to ensure individual redress, a number of problems have emerged.

168. An examination of Committee of Ministers decisions reveals, for example, that the Committee of Ministers is not infrequently in a situation where it has to use its meeting time simply to invite States to furnish information which could easily have been submitted ex officio well before the meetings. This would allow the meetings to concentrate on assessments, possible recommendations and guidance.

169. The above problems of information flow are also illustrated by the important growth during the Interlaken process of pending leading cases older than 5 years under standard supervision. These cases are not supposed to relate to more important structural or complex problems and are thus not expected to remain under supervision for longer periods of time. The number of such cases was 168 in 2011, and rapidly grew to 549 in 2016. Since then, the special efforts called for in 2015 in the Brussels Declaration to enhance the co-operation between the DEJ and the national authorities and to ensure an increased information exchange led to a rapid increase of the closure of this type of cases and a first decline in the number of pending cases in 2017 and a decrease to 483 in 2018.\(^ {301}\)

\(^{301}\) See the 2018 Annual Report of the Committee of Ministers on the supervision of the execution of judgments and decisions of the European Court of Human Rights, p. 17.
170. National co-ordinators, permanent representations and the DEJ should therefore further develop their communication practices in order to facilitate, to the extent possible, direct information exchanges between the DEJ, the coordinator and relevant national authorities.

171. The Brussels Declaration stressed the importance of affording appropriate means and authority to the Government Agents or other officials responsible for co-ordinating the execution of judgments. The Copenhagen Declaration called upon States Parties to develop and deploy sufficient resources at the national level with a view to the full and effective execution of all judgments. These calls require urgent follow-up. The resource situation of the DEJ, also addressed during the Interlaken process, should also be revisited, as set out below.

172. As regards effective domestic remedies, significant achievements have been made during the Interlaken process, in particular in the context of the execution of the Court’s judgments. Many applications have thus been resolved or stopped from coming to Strasbourg as a result of the creation of such remedies following judgments of the Court. These were not infrequently pilot judgments, related to major structural problems such as poor detention conditions, excessive length of proceedings and the non-execution of domestic judicial decisions. A number of on-going reforms are also close to completion. Some States have set up or improved general remedies before Constitutional Courts to ensure their effectiveness for Convention purposes during the Interlaken process. In order to assist national authorities in their efforts to improve the effectiveness of remedies, the CDDH prepared a Guide to good practice in respect of domestic remedies, summarising the Convention requirements and good State practice, which was adopted by the Committee of Ministers in 2013.

173. As shown above, the continuously high number of repetitive applications lodged with the Court shows that there is still a need to further improve domestic remedies. This issue should therefore continue to be at the heart of any activity supporting the national implementation of the Convention.

302 See the Brussels Declaration, cited above, Action Plan, point B.2.c).
303 See the Copenhagen Declaration, cited above, § 23.
304 See for example in Hungary, Lithuania, Serbia and Montenegro and Ukraine; discussions about the introduction of an individual right of petition to the Bulgarian Constitutional Court are on-going.
305 See the Guide to good practice in respect of domestic remedies, adopted by the Committee of Ministers on 18 September 2013.
306 See chapter A.II.1.(a) above.
174. The developments as regards other related structures and procedures necessary for the efficient national implementation of the Convention in general, and thus also for the execution of judgments of the Court, are covered by other Committee of Ministers recommendations. These recommendations notably relate to the speedy and efficient publication of both Court judgments against the State itself and of relevant jurisprudence regarding other States, good and independent procedures for assessing the Convention conformity of draft legislation, efficient professional training in the Court’s well-established case-law based on an efficient publication practice and the regular examination, after each violation found by the Court, of the effectiveness of available remedies in the area concerned. These issues have already been addressed above.

3. Development of the role of national parliaments

175. The development of the role of national parliaments in the execution process – over and above their evident role in adopting new legislation wherever necessary – has gained considerable interest during the Interlaken process and a number of recommendations to this effect have been adopted and also followed up.

176. The development of special parliamentary mechanisms to follow and support execution in all States was strongly recommended notably in the Resolutions adopted by the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe in 2015 and 2017 following the 8th and 9th reports of its Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights. It is also a major theme in the discussions around the 10th report, presently under preparation. In response, over 20 States, most recently Georgia in 2016, are reported to have set up such a mechanism. Reflections in a number of other countries are continuing. This development should be further supported.

177. The Parliamentary Assembly has for example called upon the national parliaments of the member States to establish structures guaranteeing follow-up to and monitoring of international obligations in 307 See the list of recommendations in the 2018 Annual Report of the Committee of Ministers on the supervision of the execution of judgments and decisions of the European Court of Human Rights, p. 20.

308 See chapter A. above.
309 See, for example, Resolution 2075(2015) of the Parliamentary Assembly on “The implementation of judgments of the European Court of Human Rights”, adopted on 30 September 2015; and Resolution 2178(2017) of the Parliamentary Assembly on “The implementation of judgments of the European Court of Human Rights”, adopted on 29 June 2017, with further references.
the human rights field, and in particular of the obligations stemming from the Convention. In this context the Parliamentary Assembly has also recommended that parliaments question governments on progress made in the implementation of Court judgments and demand that they present annual reports on the subject. The Parliamentary Assembly has also recommended that parliaments devote parliamentary debates to this issue and that they encourage political groups to concert their efforts to ensure execution.

178. One set of further measures organised by the Parliamentary Assembly’s Secretariat in this respect has been to ensure better training of parliamentary legal staff in the requirements of the Convention in general, and those of related to the execution of judgments in particular. So far training sessions have been held with legal staff of some 38 member States (2019).

II. Ensuring an efficient and transparent process of supervision of the execution of judgments by the Committee of Ministers

1. General developments

179. The Interlaken process has provided an important impetus to improve and adjust the Committee of Ministers’ supervision process both to the general trend in Council of Europe activities of increased dialogue and transparency and efficient interaction between monitoring and co-operation activities, and to the special needs of speedier and more efficient execution.

180. Among the very first steps in the process was the adoption of new working methods in 2010, in force as of 2011. The main aim of these was to improve efficiency and transparency, two highly interrelated concepts.

---

311 Project led by the Secretariat of the PACE - Parliamentary Project Support Division (PPSD).
312 See the decisions taken during 1100th CM-DH meeting, 2 December 2010, Item e) on “Measures to improve the execution of the judgments of the European Court of Human Rights, Proposals for the implementation of the Interlaken Declaration and Action Plan.
2. The new working methods

(a) Efficiency

181. With the new working methods in 2010, the Committee of Ministers introduced a new simple and transparent prioritisation system – enhanced and standard supervision. The enhanced supervision, implying detailed examination of progress made whenever necessary, was mainly reserved for inter-State cases, cases revealing important structural or otherwise important complex problems and cases requiring urgent individual measures. Pilot judgments are brought automatically under enhanced supervision. Other cases are dealt with under the standard system with minimum Committee of Ministers intervention. The standard procedure built on the advances made in the national incorporation of the Convention and of the direct effect generally given to Court judgments. These developments made it possible to expect that many cases would not require much guidance or other Committee of Ministers attention to move forward; the DEJ would be able to assist with advice and other assistance.\(^{313}\)

(b) Transparency

182. Under previous practice, information submitted to the Committee of Ministers was made available to the public only after the relevant Committee of Ministers’ Human Rights meeting. As a result, observers of the execution process would only be informed of relevant positions and submissions after the meeting and the adoption of the Committee of Ministers’ decisions. With the new working methods, anyone making a submission to the Committee of Ministers is required to indicate at the outset if confidentiality is requested, and if no request is attached to the submission, publication of submissions would henceforth be immediate. As a result, it is easy today, notably for national parliaments, State authorities concerned and civil society, to follow the procedures before the Committee.

\(^{313}\) After a one-year test period the Committee expressed satisfaction with the new working methods (see decision taken at their 1128th meeting – 2 December 2011) and decided to continue to use them for the future. They have subsequently undergone a number of minor changes, notably to increase transparency by publishing the cases proposed for examination well in advance of relevant meetings. Their present functioning is described in more detail notably in the 2017 Annual Report.
183. The Committee of Ministers’ decisions are published very shortly after the end of each human rights meeting. They are accompanied by press releases and tweets. The further dissemination and, where necessary translations, of these decisions needs, however to be enhanced.

184. Thanks to the new Committee of Ministers’ website and the HUDOC Exec publication system, relevant case documents are also immediately accessible to the public (even through RSS feeds) as soon as the time-limits foreseen in the Rules of the Committee of Ministers have expired.314 A not infrequent problem remains, however: the continued absence of generalised good translation of the Committee’s decisions and interim resolutions as foreseen in Recommendation (2008)2.315 It would be helpful to analyse whether the decisions and interim resolutions translated into national languages by member States could be shared by them and published in the HUDOC Exec database.

185. In view of the interest demonstrated by civil society in execution as a result of the above changes, notably manifested by the creation of the “umbrella organisation” European Implementation Network (EIN), the DEJ has organised a number of trainings for NGOs with a view to enhance the quality of their submissions.316

186. The participation in the procedure before the Committee of Ministers is, however, not subject to the same guarantees as participation in that before the Court, notably when it comes to guarantees for the confidentiality of correspondence with the Committee and for the safety of applicants, their lawyers or intervening NGOs. This is particularly worrisome in the light of the situation in Europe today, as evidenced notably by judgments of the Court or the execution thereof or through the visits of the Commissioner for Human Rights. The situation led the CDDH to be instructed to carry out a study on the impact of current national legislation, policies and practices on the activities of civil society organisations, human rights defenders and national institutions for the 314 See the Rules of the Committee of Ministers for the supervision of the execution of judgments and of the terms of friendly settlements, adopted by the Committee of Ministers on 10 May 2006 at the 964th meeting of the Ministers’ Deputies and amended on 18 January 2017 at the 1275th meeting of the Ministers’ Deputies.

315 See the CDDH Guide to good practice on the implementation of Recommendation (2008)2 of the Committee of Ministers on efficient domestic capacity for rapid execution of judgments of the European Court of Human Rights, § 7; and the CDDH report on measures taken by the member States to implement relevant parts of the Brussels Declaration, document CM(2019)149, §§ 74 and 112.

316 See, for example: http://www.einnetwork.org/blog-five/2018/10/19/ein-delivers-first-thematic-training-for-ngos-on-echr-judgment-execution.
promotion and protection of human rights,\textsuperscript{317} leading the Committee of Ministers to adopt a specific Recommendation, CM/Rec(2018)11 to member States on the need to strengthen the protection and promotion of civil society space in Europe.\textsuperscript{318} In parallel, the European Committee on Legal Co-operation (CDCJ) has been instructed to examine the need for a European Convention on the profession of lawyer.

187. The question whether applicants should equally be allowed to submit communications on general measures, just as NGOs and as is the case of applicants in the proceedings before the Court, was examined in 2015, but the CDDH did not at the time consider such an extension to be required. The present situation is, however, still a source of concern expressed by the CCBE. A number of governments accept applicants’ submission on general measures already today.

(c) Dialogue

188. A further major point is the increase of visible and transparent dialogue of the Committee of Ministers with respondent States, including notably guidance through decisions and resolutions. Such guidance is given not only as a result of an increase in the number of decisions adopted every year, but also as a result of the quality of the decisions, based on a more transparent and open procedure and providing more detailed and substantiated assessments, recommendations, advice and warnings of different kinds. In 2011, 97 more detailed examinations of cases were made during the Committee’s meetings, and in 2018, 122 (with a peak of 157 in 2017).\textsuperscript{319} Decisions have also stressed more than before the support offered to member States through the Council of Europe’s co-operation programmes and the expertise developed by monitoring bodies and through intergovernmental co-operation programmes. In the cases under enhanced supervision this dialogue needs to be vigorously pursued and further developed, notably in those revealing major structural problems so as to effectively limit the number of repetitive applications to the Court by ensuring the speedy introduction of effective domestic remedies as far as possible.

\textsuperscript{317} This work was conducted by the Drafting Group on civil society and national human rights institutions (CDDH-INST) during the biennium 2017-2018. See notably the CDDH Analysis on the impact of current national legislation, policies and practices on the activities of civil society organisations, human rights defenders and national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights, document CM(2017)92-add5final (= CDDH(2017)87 Addendum IV).

\textsuperscript{318} Recommendation CM/Rec(2018)11 of the Committee of Ministers to member States on the need to strengthen the protection and promotion of civil society space in Europe was adopted by the Committee of Ministers at the 1330th meeting of the Ministers’ Deputies, on 28 November 2018.

\textsuperscript{319} See the 2018 Annual Report of the Committee of Ministers on the supervision of the execution of judgments and decisions of the European Court of Human Rights, E.1., p. 67.

189. As part of its efforts to improve its dialogue with the States, the Committee of Ministers decided on 16 January 2013 to better highlight positive national developments. As a consequence, it has improved the presentation of such developments in the annual reports as from 2014 and adopted a systematic approach of so-called “partial closures”. These allow the Committee to close groups of cases related to a common problem to highlight progress made (to the extent the problems at issue are at the heart of the cases closed and that remaining issues can continue to be examined in the context of the remaining cases in the group). Earlier practices kept all cases relating to a certain general problem on the agenda until the problem was solved, thus preventing speedy and visible positive feedback as reforms progressed. The partial closure practice was further developed in 2017 and 2018 to encompass also all repetitive cases where individual measures had been adopted so as to allow also positive feedback in this respect. Even if the new practices initially lead to certain “traceability problems” (successive changes of the names of groups), the general reception of this effort to provide speedier and more nuanced feedback has been very positive.

190. The dialogue engaged by the Committee is followed up and supplemented by the DEJ (especially in cases under standard supervision which only rarely come before the Committee). In the context of this dialogue, the DEJ may offer different forms of assistance to States, notably to allow sharing good practices between them. Numerous conferences have thus been held during the Interlaken process to allow States to share experiences as regards the drafting of action plans, the reopening of judicial proceedings, the handling of big structural problems such as non-execution of domestic judgments, poor conditions of detention, unreasonably lengthy trials or prevention of abuses by security forces. The different comparative studies carried out by the CDDH over the last years have notably been important tools and so has the special CDDH website dedicated to the reopening of proceedings.

320 See e.g. the Remarks by the Director General of Human Rights and Rule of Law in the 2017 Annual Report.
321 See the 2017 Annual Report of the Committee of Ministers on the supervision of the execution of judgments and decisions of the European Court of Human Rights, pp. 14, 55.
(d) Synergies

191. The increased dialogue and transparency in the Committee of Ministers’ procedures must be seen in the light of an increasing awareness that execution is a shared responsibility between many – well highlighted at the Brussels Conference.\(^{323}\)

192. For synergies to be developed, the positions of the Committee of Ministers, the body responsible for execution supervision under the Convention, must be disseminated in such a way as to be rapidly known by the other stakeholders and sufficiently clear and precise to provide the necessary guidance. This has rightly been considered as essential in Recommendation (2008)2.

193. Measures to promote synergies between the different stakeholders at the Council of Europe level were equally taken, such as the debate held in June 2017 in the Committee of Ministers on the Annual Report 2016 with participation of all Council of Europe departments concerned.\(^{324}\)

(e) Subsidiarity

194. The Interlaken process has laid great weight on the principle of subsidiarity. The importance of this principle also for the execution process was stressed from the outset, notably in the context of the States’ freedom of choice as to the means to be employed to ensure execution of the Court’s judgments and decisions. In the light of the positive results obtained, the Brussels Conference welcomed the new 2010 working methods of the Committee of Ministers for the supervision of the execution of the Court’s judgments as these had, strengthened the principle of subsidiarity.\(^{325}\) As shown above, they expressed considerable trust in the national decision-making procedures both through the action plan system and the twin-track procedure, allowing large State autonomy in handling ordinary cases.

(f) Tools

195. To allow it to live up to the expectations in the best possible way, the Committee of Ministers, in the course of the Interlaken process, has looked closely also into the “toolbox” of means to ensure timely execution

\(^{323}\) See the Brussels Declaration, cited above.

\(^{324}\) See the 2017 Annual Report of the Committee of Ministers on the supervision of the execution of judgments and decisions of the European Court of Human Rights, p. 12.

\(^{325}\) See the Brussels Declaration, cited above, point 6.
in 2013, building on the two earlier exercises before the Committee itself in 2003-2004 and before the CDDH in 2008. The first results of this examination were published in the Annual Report 2013.\textsuperscript{326} Taking into account further comments by the CDDH and the Court, the issue and necessary responses eventually became part of the Brussels Declaration and the ensuing follow-up to that declaration.

196. Among key tools figure the role which the Committee of Ministers can play in providing political impetus through evaluations, criticisms and suggestions, whilst at the same time offering different forms of support, usually in the form of expert advice or co-operation activities or programmes offering training and legal expertise. The Council of Europe Development Bank may also assist in ensuring financing of deserving projects, example the replacement of old and dilapidated prisons with new ones.

197. The period of the Interlaken reform process has also seen a first use of the infringement procedure.\textsuperscript{327} The consequences of this procedure remain to be further elucidated. A first test will be the effect given by the respondent State to the first “infringement judgment”.\textsuperscript{328} One may note, however, that the Committee has stressed on several occasions that respect for the binding nature of the judgments of the Court is a condition for membership in the organisation\textsuperscript{329} and/or that non-respect of the judgments is in flagrant conflict with the State’s international obligations, both as a High Contracting Party to the Convention and as a member State of the Council of Europe.\textsuperscript{330} During the discussions on the longer-term effectiveness of the Convention system, strong objections were raised to the idea of financial sanctions.

\textsuperscript{326} See the 2013 Annual Report of the Committee of Ministers on the supervision of the execution of judgments and decisions of the European Court of Human Rights, pp. 12 and 170-176.
\textsuperscript{327} See Ilgar Mammadov v. Azerbaijan (infringement proceedings) [GC], no. 15172/13, 29 mai 2019.
\textsuperscript{328} The Committee of Ministers, at their 1355th meeting (23-25 September 2019) (DH), took note of the updated action plan submitted by the respondent Government in respect of the case in question and of the concrete individual and general measures envisaged therein, see document CM/Del/Dec(2019)1355/H46-2.
\textsuperscript{330} See e.g. the Interim resolution CM/ResDH(2014)185, Execution of the judgments of the European Court of Human Rights in the cases Varnava, Xenides-Arestis and 32 other cases against Turkey, adopted by the Committee of Ministers on 25 September 2014 at the 1208th meeting of the Ministers’ Deputies, document CM/ResDH(2014)185.
for non-implementation of the Court’s judgments by the Respondent State.\footnote{See the CDDH Report on “The longer-term future of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights” adopted on 11 December 2015, § 168.}

(g) Resources

198. The reinforcement of the DEJ requested at the Brussels Conference was rapidly obtained and echoes so far are that this has been very helpful in developing good communication and dialogue with relevant domestic authorities, in particular with the coordinator offices. However, in view of the necessity of a further improved execution the needs of the DEJ appear to require a renewed assessment. That being said, the experience of reinforcement in the form of secondment of experienced lawyers/judges to the DEJ is positive, and the number of seconded persons has also increased during the reform process. Experience suggests that such secondments should preferably last two years or more because of the nature of the work in the DEJ.

3. Challenges

199. The CDDH’s report on the longer-term future of the Convention system of 2015 indicated that the main problems encountered in the execution of the Court’s judgments and requiring long-term action were the absence of political will and technical reasons linked to the complexity of execution measures required or their financial implications.\footnote{See the CDDH Report on “The longer-term future of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights”, cited above, notably § 195 iii).}

200. The CDDH thus concluded that there was a necessity of finding ways and means of supplementing the technical support offered with a suitable political lever and that there was a need to further enhancing the procedures for the implementation of judgments related to large-scale violations committed in the context of complex problems that call for political solutions and peaceful settlement.\footnote{See ibid., § 203.}

201. These conclusions have been largely endorsed and further developed in the Committee of Ministers’ subsequent Annual Reports. Challenges identified in the reports included also a slow or blocked execution because of disagreement between national institutions, or amongst political parties, as regards the substance of reforms required and/or the procedure to be followed. Moreover, problems arose in case of absence of a common understanding as to the scope of execution.
measures required following developments of the Court’s case law, e.g. as regards the scope of obligations in situations where a State exercises jurisdiction without territorial control as compared to situations where such control is exercised. Finally, the refusal to adopt individual measures required or to pay just satisfaction awarded can often be an indicator of fundamental disagreements with the conclusions of the Court in the judgments at issue.

202. As indicated in subsequent Annual Reports, considerable efforts have been made in the context of the supervision process to increase the synergies with the Council of Europe’s co-operation activities and available expertise, especially in response to major structural or otherwise complex problems. The exchange of experiences through the organisation of thematic debates (in 2018 on detention conditions and in 2019 on effective investigations into actions of law enforcement authorities) can be highlighted here.

203. As regards more political issues, considerable efforts to engage necessary dialogues have also been made. The Chairs of the 2018 Human Rights meetings also underlined that these situations require intensive discussions and consultations, including at the highest levels, or the involvement of actors from outside the Council of Europe. They noted that it was to be welcomed that in no case the dialogue broke off, so that efforts to find solutions continue. However, these situations also require significant political and material investment, and may call for confidence-building and co-operation activities. They added that problems related to Europe’s “grey zones” or “unresolved conflict zones” continue to require the greatest attention, including questions linked with Council of Europe access to such zones.

4. Measures to deal with repetitive cases

204. The handling of repetitive cases has been an important concern during the Interlaken process. As shown above, a number of proposals have been examined by the CDDH. One concerned the interest of introducing a representative application procedure before the Court in the event of numerous complaints alleging the same violation against the 334 See e.g. the Annual Report 2017, p. 10 (Introduction by the Chairs of the HR meetings) and pp. 13 and 15 (Remarks by the Director General of Human Rights and Rule of Law).

335 See the 2018 Annual Report of the Committee of Ministers, cited above, pp. 7-9.
same State. Another concerned possible new means to resolve large numbers of applications resulting from systemic problems. On this issue the CDDH underlined the importance of respondent States ensuring full, prompt and effective execution, in full co-operation with the Committee of Ministers. It stressed in this connection that, besides the new possibilities offered by Protocol No. 14, recent experience showed the powerful impact of carefully designed domestic remedies to handle such situations as these allowed the settlement of repetitive applications at the national level. Ensuring the effectiveness of domestic remedies has also been the main avenue pursued by the Committee of Ministers in the context of its supervision of execution.

205. The potential of well-designed pilot judgment procedures to handle the problem of repetitive cases was also noted in the Committee of Ministers’ Annual Reports as confirmed in the context of the execution of many pilot judgments which managed to settle tens of thousands of applications with the help of newly created domestic remedies. To secure these results, the Committee has consistently put pilot judgments immediately on the agenda to ensure that necessary action plans are developed – and also before the expiry of deadlines set – in order to ensure that necessary results have been achieved. The main exception so far has been the Yuriy Nikolayevich Ivanov v. Ukraine pilot judgment (in a group of cases today frequently referred to as the Burmych group following the Court’s decision in 2017 to send some 12,000 cases back to the Committee of Ministers to ensure a Convention-compliant solution). The current situation in this regard is regularly supervised by the Committee. The development and the consequences of this novel approach to the ineffective execution of pilot judgments should be monitored.

336 See the CDDH report on the advisability and modalities of a “representative application procedure”, document CM(2013)33 (= CDDH(2013)R77 Addendum IV); and chapter B.I.5.(c) above.

337 See the CDDH report containing conclusions and possible proposals for action on ways to resolve the large numbers of applications arising from systemic issues identified by the Court, document CM(2013)93 add6 (= CDDH(2013)R78 Addendum III). See also the specific website dedicated to this work: https://www.coe.int/en/web/human-rights-intergovernmental-co-operation/work-completed/States-obligations-and-domestic-remedies/[%2230157570%22:%0]{%}.

338 See the Annual Reports of the Committee of Ministers on the supervision of the execution of judgments and decisions of the European Court of Human Rights, available at: https://www.coe.int/en/web/execution/annual-reports.

339 In its latest decisions, the Committee of Ministers (DH) regretted the lack of further tangible action in adopting the relevant institutional, legislative and other practical measures for the execution of Yuriy Nikolayevich Ivanov, Zhovner group and Burmych and Others v. Ukraine (applications nos. 40450/04, 56848/00 and 46852/13) and reiterated that the delay in the full implementation of general measures raises serious
206. It is noted, however, that the number of “Article 46 judgments” (i.e. judgments containing recommendations as to different execution issues) delivered by the Court, and especially of pilot judgments, has decreased considerably in the last few years. 2018 saw for example only 9 “Article 46 judgments” and no pilot judgment notwithstanding continuously high numbers of execution processes under enhanced supervision because of the important structural or complex problems revealed. The question whether there is any link between this trend and the new non-contentious procedure before the Court to settle certain types of repetitive cases merits further attention.

207. The Ivanov pilot judgment procedure illustrates an important side-effect of the handling of repetitive cases in a more and more simplified manner. The traditional fact-finding made also in repetitive cases has frequently been important in identifying the root causes of major long-standing systemic problems.\footnote{The limited amount of such information in the Burmych group led the DEJ to establish a special co-operation programme with the Human Rights Trust Fund’s support, engaging outside experts, to investigate the root causes of the massive problem of non-execution of domestic court judgments at issue in the group.} A further issue relates to the possibility of ensuring adequate individual redress. A number of findings of violations require a presentation of the relevant facts and of the legal reasoning to allow domestic authorities to provide, at the execution stage, relevant redress, for instance in cases of unfair civil or criminal trials.

III. Developing interaction with other stakeholders

208. The interaction with other stakeholders is largely built on efficient information exchanges and a strong commitment on the part of all to contribute, each stakeholder within its competences, to successful execution – a shared responsibility as the matter was put in Brussels in 2015.

1. The Court

209. The interaction between the Committee of Ministers and the DEJ and the Court and its Registry is complex and sensitive because of the necessary separation of powers between the judiciary and the executive. The main avenue has therefore been to improve information exchange to allow each entity to perform its tasks in full knowledge of the relevant facts.

\footnote{concern in view of the deadline set by the Court of 12 October 2019, see the Committee of Ministers’ decisions adopted at the 1355th meeting, 23-25 September 2019 (DH), CM/Del/Dec(2019)1355/H46-28, § 7.}
210. The Committee of Ministers’ general efforts to increase transparency in the course of the Interlaken process has thus made it easier for the Court and the Registry to follow progress made in the execution of individual cases/groups of cases and was also supplemented by more regular contacts between the DEJ and Sections of the Court and the Registry. The improved information flow was also used in many pilot judgments and so-called “Article 46 judgments”, allowing timely Court interventions in a number of ongoing execution processes.

211. The adoption of new working methods by the Court also involves certain execution-related aspects which are currently being discussed between the DEJ and the Registry.

2. The Parliamentary Assembly

212. The Parliamentary Assembly has taken a keen interest in the execution of the Court’s judgments since 2000 and is presently (September 2019) preparing its 10th report on the implementation of judgments of the Court. The work of the Assembly has always been fully synchronised with the Committee of Ministers’ requirements as these have appeared in decisions and interim resolutions and has also profited from the improved information as regards the Committee of Ministers’ supervision of execution.

213. The Assembly makes an important contribution to execution and has unique tools as it reaches out directly to the parliaments in the member States. It can thus add an important dimension of support for execution.

214. The main additional contributions in the course of the Interlaken process, which have been shown above but are clearly inspired by the Assembly, have been of a different nature. There is first a major effort to ensure that parliaments get more involved, where appropriate, in the domestic control of the progress of in the execution of judgments, for example by requiring that governments regularly report on progress made in the execution processes, by setting up special committees or by parliamentary questions. Secondly, increased training is provided to improve the knowledge of the legal advisers of the parliaments in Convention matters, including as regards the execution of the Court’s judgments and the requirements of Article 46. Both these additional efforts are welcome and supplement well the regular reporting on the progress of execution in individual cases. They ought therefore to be pursued.
3. The Commissioner for Human Rights

215. The office of the Human Rights Commissioner has over the years become more and more interested in execution and in assisting execution. This trend has been very visible during the Interlaken process and many country visits and reports have been used to support and assist execution. The findings of the Commissioner have at the same time been valuable contributions to the Committee of Ministers’ supervision process and numerous decisions attest to the weight which the Committee attaches to these findings. The Commissioner’s prestige and freedom of action are major assets for the system and in 2017 the Commissioner was also formally recognised the right to intervene directly before the Committee of Ministers in specific execution processes. So far the Commissioner has no used this right.

4. Co-operation activities

216. The importance of co-operation activities has been consistently stressed and the Brighton Conference notably encouraged all States Parties to make full use of technical assistance, and to give and receive upon request bilateral technical assistance in a spirit of open co-operation. In this spirit, a number of initiatives have been taken.

217. There has notably been a major effort within the Council of Europe Secretariat to ensure better communication between DEJ and those responsible for co-operation programmes in order to ensure that synergies are fully exploited. Results have been evident in the design and implementation both of major country action plans and other more targeted co-operation programmes. The management of programmes directly linked with human rights, the rule of law and the Convention has also been cared for directly by the Directorate General of Human Rights and Rule of law, which has further facilitated speedy interaction to allow full use of synergies. The contribution of the Human Rights Trust Fund has also been an important support through its speedy capacity to set up programmes in reaction to urgent needs. In the same vein there has also been an increase in the DEJ’s capacity to provide speedy assistance.

218. These developments have been strongly supported during the Interlaken process, notably by the Secretary General. In this vein, the Committee of Ministers has itself started to invite, more frequently, States to avail themselves of the assistance available within the Council of Europe, be it expert advice, training or even funding though the Council of Europe Development Bank.
219. This being said, the Copenhagen Declaration called on the States Parties to take further measures when necessary to strengthen the capacity for effective and rapid execution of judgments at the national level, including through the use of inter-State co-operation. It further invited the Committee of Ministers to consider the need to further strengthen the capacity for offering rapid and flexible technical assistance to States Parties facing the challenge of implementing Court judgments, in particular pilot judgments.

GENERAL CONCLUSIONS

220. As the Interlaken process approaches its end there is general agreement about the Convention system’s continued vital importance for Europe. In 2018, the Copenhagen Declaration stressed the extraordinary contribution the Convention system has made to the protection and promotion of human rights and the rule of law in Europe since its establishment and the central role it plays today in maintaining democratic security and improving good governance across the continent. It also reaffirmed the strong attachment of States Parties to the right of individual application to the Court as a cornerstone of the system for protecting the rights and freedoms set forth in the Convention.

221. The Interlaken reform process, backed by the effects of Protocol No. 14 which entered into force at the same time the process was launched, has been crucial for the system. It has led to significant advances, which also bode well for the system’s capacity to meet new challenges and to consolidate and further develop the progress made. The necessity of a new major revision of the system is therefore not apparent. In the light of subsequent developments, the CDDH sees no reason to depart from its assessment made in 2015 that the current challenges the Convention system is facing can be met within the existing framework.\(^{345}\) What appears important is rather to allow the Convention system as it has emerged from the Interlaken process and Protocol No. 14, provided with sufficient resources which the States Parties have committed themselves to provide,\(^{346}\) to demonstrate fully its potential.

341 See the Copenhagen Declaration, cited above, §§ 23 and 25.
343 See, inter alia, the Copenhagen Declaration, cited above, §§ 1 and 48.

222. Further reform has led to the adoption of Protocol No. 15 which has not yet been adopted by all member States,\(^{347}\) as well as Protocol No. 16. It should be noted that securing the long-term effectiveness of the Convention system is an ongoing work that requires the full commitment and continued efforts of all parties concerned.

Implementation of the Convention at the national level

223. During the Interlaken process, notable progress was made in a number of areas relevant for improving the national implementation of the Convention. The accessibility of the Convention standards in the member States has been improved by increased translations of significant judgments of the Court, summaries thereof and other information documents into the national languages. Furthermore, training on the Convention standards is increasingly provided by many different actors in the Convention system and becomes more and more targeted to the needs of different legal professionals and law enforcement officials. These measures should continue to be taken and enhanced by member States.

224. Regarding concrete measures to be taken by the national authorities to comply with the Convention, measures are now in place in a number of member States to verify the compatibility of draft legislation with the Convention standards. As a follow-up to the work already done the CDDH/DH-SYSC could gather information on best practices including on “compatibility guidelines” for legislators already developed by some States. More consideration should still be given to the general principles

---

\(^{345}\) See the CDDH Report on “The longer-term future of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights”, cited above, Executive summary and § ; this assessment was and is shared by the Court, see the Comment from the Court on the report of the CDDH on the longer-term future of the Convention system of February 2016, § 4 and document CDDH(2019)25, § 44.

\(^{346}\) See for the States Parties’ commitment to taking all necessary steps to ensure the Convention system’s effective functioning, including by ensuring adequate funding, the Copenhagen Declaration, cited above, § 4.

\(^{347}\) See paragraph 82 above.
developed by the Court in the case-law concerning other States. Domestic courts increasingly take account of the Court’s developing case-law and apply the Convention directly. National courts of the member States which have ratified Protocol No. 16 to the Convention can engage in a direct dialogue with the Court by requesting it to give an advisory opinion on a Convention-related question. The effects of this Protocol, which entered into force in August 2018, on the effective national implementation of the Convention, the relationship between national courts and the Strasbourg Court and the latter’s workload remain to be evaluated.

225. However, despite considerable efforts undertaken by member States in order to improve the implementation of the Convention at the national level, and despite the above-mentioned progress made, the national implementation of the Convention still remains one of the principal challenges facing the Convention system.\(^\text{348}\) In particular, notwithstanding the successful creation of domestic remedies in a number of States and the ensuing reduction in the Court’s workload, there is still a need to further improve their functioning. The creation of effective remedies and improvement of existing remedies in line with the Convention standards should therefore remain at the heart of activities supporting the national implementation of the Convention.\(^\text{349}\) Furthermore, although independent National Human Rights Institutions have been established in a majority of member States, appropriate conditions should be ensured for them to carry out their activities and play their role independently and without undue obstacles.

226. The national implementation of the Convention, in accordance with the principle of subsidiarity and the margin of appreciation subject to the supervisory jurisdiction of the Court, would also be further strengthened by the ratification, by the two States which have not yet done so,\(^\text{350}\) of Protocol No. 15 to the Convention,\(^\text{351}\) as well as by the Council of Europe’s co-operation activities.

\(^{348}\) See for this assessment already the CDDH Report on “The longer-term future of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights”, cited above, § 34; and also the Comment from the Court on the report of the CDDH on the longer-term future of the Convention system of February 2016, § 3; and recently the Copenhagen Declaration, cited above, § 12.

\(^{349}\) See chapter A.II.1.(a) above for further references.

\(^{350}\) See the Website of the Treaty Office for the chart of signatures and ratifications of Protocol No. 15.

The Court’s situation

227. As regards the number of applications currently pending before the Court, it was acknowledged in the Copenhagen Declaration that since the beginning of the Interlaken process, the Court has managed to reduce the number of applications pending before it considerably despite a continuously high number of new applications.352

228. It is to be welcomed that the Court successfully streamlined the procedures before it. Having cleared the backlog of Single-Judge cases, it continuously filters out clearly inadmissible applications, ensures that applications raising issues which are the subject of well-established case-law of the Court take less judicial time and started to apply a number of new procedural tools allowing to deal more efficiently also with non-repetitive cases.353 It is of utmost importance to regularly assess the functioning of new working methods.

229. While some further procedural changes regarding access to Court and a sound administration of justice were laid down in Protocol No. 15 to the Convention (see above), it is to be noted that during the reform process, a large number of possible, partly far-reaching changes to the procedure before the Court were analysed by the CDDH, but not retained in the end. This reflects its assessment that the challenges the system is faced with are best addressed within its current framework.

230. The Interlaken process further saw a considerable expansion of the information made available to applicants on the scope of the protection provided by the Convention, also in national languages, in order to further facilitate an informed decision on whether to submit an application or not.

231. Despite this, and as evidenced in the above analysis of the Court’s backlog, the Court’s caseload still gives some cause for concern,354 also in view of its impact on the length of proceedings. It discloses two major remaining challenges: the reduction of the 352 See the Copenhagen Declaration, cited above, §§ 43-44 and 49; and also document CDDH-BU(2019)R101 Addendum of 12 June 2019, § 23.

353 See document CDDH(2019)12 (Estonia, United Kingdom). For some concerns regarding the new procedures adopted by the Court see chapter B above.
continuously high number of repetitive applications and the reduction of the high number of (priority or non-priority) non-repetitive, potentially well-founded Chamber cases.

232. As regards the backlog of repetitive cases, further efforts are necessary by all actors in the Convention system. While recognising the important efforts and progress made by a number of States Parties, they should ensure a better implementation of the Convention at the national level, including by a speedy execution of the Court’s judgments. They should notably ensure that effective domestic remedies are created as soon as possible where systemic problems arise. Just as the Court, in co-operation with the Government Agents, the Department for the Execution of Judgments of the Court should continue striving to optimise its working methods in order to handle this group of cases. Subject to the necessary resources, the latter should carry out further targeted assistance programmes aimed at helping States Parties to implement Court judgments disclosing systemic or large-scale problems.\(^{355}\)

233. As for the backlog of non-repetitive, potentially well-founded cases which are particularly important for the development of the Convention system as they often raise new issues regarding the interpretation and application of the Convention, the Court should be encouraged to continue its efforts to streamline its procedures in co-operation with the Government Agents. However, it must be taken into account that this group of cases is, as a rule, not suitable for a grouped or more summary treatment. As has repeatedly been stated during the Interlaken process, the necessary resources need to be made available to the Court to deal with the backlog of this group of cases while ensuring the quality of the judgments and decisions delivered.\(^{356}\)

234. The above holds particularly true for inter-State applications as a result of their particular complexity. The CDDH takes the view that the issue of more efficient processing of such applications requires a more in-depth examination. It therefore considers it useful that the CDDH/DH-SYSC conduct work facilitating proposals to ensure the effective processing and resolution of cases relating to inter-State disputes as well as individual applications arising from situations of conflict between States, without thereby limiting the jurisdiction of the Court, taking into account the specific features of these categories of cases, inter alia regarding the establishment of facts, in the next biennium.

235. The backlog situation of the Court in the above areas and the effectiveness of the measures taken should be evaluated by the Court in co-operation with member States.

236. In order to strengthen the authority of the Court by safeguarding its independence and by attracting persons of the highest calibre, the CDDH suggests that the Committee of Ministers adopt a Declaration underlining both the importance of preventing disguised reprisals against former judges at the end of their mandate and of former judges being able to find again an adequate post in their country and to have their service at the Court appropriately recognised, respecting at the same time the diversity of the constitutional systems in the member States.

237. It is further of the utmost importance to ensure that the independence of the Court and the binding nature of its judgments are respected by all the actors of the Convention system.

238. The reform process finally showed the importance of granting applicants and their representatives who lodge applications with the Court protection from reprisals where necessary.

239. The CDDH further encourages the Committee of Ministers to reiterate its political support for the accession of the European Union to the Convention.

357 This has recently been stressed by the Committee of Ministers in its Report on securing the long-term effectiveness of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights for its 129th Session in Helsinki (16-17 May 2019), document CM(2019)70-final, § 43.
Execution of the Court’s judgments

240. As regards the execution of the Court’s judgments, the overview of measures adopted in the course of the Interlaken process above has pointed to considerable progress in ensuring both the full, effective and rapid execution of the Court’s judgments at the domestic level and also more effective and transparent supervision thereof by the Committee of Ministers. The supervision process demonstrates the system’s capacity to help member States in overcoming problems of many different kinds in a Convention-compliant manner and to maintain the mutual trust necessary for good inter-State co-operation.358

241. The assistance provided by the Council of Europe, coupled with peer advice and supervision in the Committee of Ministers, as supplemented by the activities of the Department for the Execution of Judgments and the possibilities of further support through co-operation programs or advice from expert bodies, to solve many important structural and complex issues revealed by the judgments of the Court has been crucial for the improvements made in the context of the Interlaken process. The further development of such programs and activities, including those of the Department, well synchronised with the domestic needs, as these become revealed by the Court’s judgments and the Committee of Ministers’ supervision of their execution, is greatly needed. The same is true for a further development of joint programmes between the Council of Europe and the European Union, in order to contribute to an increased protection of human rights, rule of law and respect for basic principles of democracy, including in the member States of the European Union.

242. That being said, the Committee of Ministers’ Annual Reports on the supervision of the execution of the Court’s judgments have also hinted at a number of continuing challenges. These correspond largely with those identified by the CDDH359 in its 2017 Guide to good practice on the implementation of Recommendation CM/Rec(2008)2 of the Committee of Ministers on efficient domestic capacity for rapid execution of judgments of the Court. It is accordingly necessary to reinforce the support and authority of the national co-ordinator for the execution of judgments and of his/her actions and ensure their follow-up. Furthermore, new coordinated strategies of action at high level should be developed and more generally the synergies between all those involved should be enhanced so as to ensure the timely submission of comprehensive action plans and their implementation. Likewise, there is a need for clarity and awareness of the relevant national actors regarding their respective roles and responsibilities in the execution process. The difficulties in interpreting certain judgments for the purposes of identifying the measures required, or possible practical obstacles regarding the payment of just satisfaction have to be overcome. In addition, the CDDH’s conclusion in 2015, that it was necessary to reinforce the search for ways and means to supplement the technical support available with suitable political levers, where appropriate by working closely with other international actors, appears despite efforts made, not to have lost any of its relevance.360

243. Moreover, it is important to further encourage, wherever appropriate, the national judiciary to contribute fully to the execution of the Court’s judgments and to enhance the contribution of parliaments to the execution of the Court’s judgments. Furthermore, the transparency and accessibility of the work of the Committee of Ministers should be increased (for example by the translation and the dissemination of relevant decisions, including by means of the HUDOC Exec database). Finally, there was a need for an appropriate political lever underpinning technical solutions.361 A number of activities are currently ongoing in all the areas mentioned above, as the case may be by the Committee of Ministers, the Secretary General, the Court, and the relevant services of the Council of Europe’s Secretariat in order to improve the situation. The recent session of the Committee of Ministers in Helsinki in expressed the clear political will of all States to continue the efforts under way.362

244. Furthermore, as regards the supervision of the execution of judgments there is a need to continuously develop working methods, co-operation and information exchange between the national authorities and the Department for the Execution of Judgments. Finally, the resource situation of the Department for the Execution of Judgments should also be kept under review.

Ongoing dialogue

245. It is, finally, an overarching feature of the Interlaken process that the dialogue between all the different actors in the Convention system has considerably intensified. While allowing the Convention system to settle, that dialogue should continue and create the necessary synergies enabling all actors in the system to play their respective roles in the shared responsibility to implement the Convention. As regards, in particular, more complex situations, including situations of absence of political will, such dialogue must be the main avenue to move forward.
COMMENT FROM THE EUROPEAN COURT OF HUMAN RIGHTS ON THE CDDH CONTRIBUTION TO THE EVALUATION OF THE INTERLAKEN REFORM PROCESS

1 As adopted by the Plenary Court on 27 January 2020.
1. This comment on “The CDDH contribution to the evaluation provided for by the Interlaken Declaration” (hereinafter “the CDDH contribution”) has been prepared at the request of the Committee of Ministers. The European Court of Human Rights (“the Court”) congratulates the CDDH and in particular the DH-SYSC on its work throughout the 2018-2019 biennium.

2. The Interlaken Declaration (2010) invited the Committee of Ministers to decide before the end of 2019 whether the measures adopted in the course of the reform process, in particular the measures to implement Protocol No. 14 and the Interlaken Action Plan, have proven to be sufficient to assure the sustainable functioning of the control mechanism of the Convention or whether more profound changes are necessary. It is recalled here that concerning the challenge of the caseload, the CDDH considered that no further measures appeared necessary regarding the clearance of the backlog of clearly inadmissible and repetitive cases.

3. The present comment should be read together with other relevant contributions which the Court has made to the reform process since the CDDH’s mid-term assessment in 2015, namely (i) the Comment from the Court on the CDDH report on the longer-term future of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights (February 2016); (ii) a report prepared by the Court outlining the measures taken in 2017 (2017); and (iii) a report prepared by the Court outlining measures taken from 2018-June 2019 (June 2019).

4. The Court considers that the Interlaken reform process has been a positive exercise which has enabled States Parties to reaffirm their commitment to the Convention system and to the Court. In each of the five high-level conference declarations the States Parties have recognised the extraordinary contribution of the Court and the Convention system to the protection of human rights in Europe. The reform process has also strengthened the notion of shared responsibility which underpins the Convention system. In this connection the declarations have stressed the crucial role which States Parties must play in implementing the Convention at domestic level and in effectively executing the Court’s judgments.

---

2 CM(2019)182-add 4 December 2019
3 See record of 1363rd meeting (11 December 2019) 4 See the https://rm.coe.int/the-longer-term-future-of-the-system-of-the-european-convention-onhum/1680695ad
4 adopted on 11 December 2015 (see also document CM(2015)176-add1final).
5 2016 Comment on CDDH report on longer-term future of Convention
Finally, the Court has itself participated fully in the reform process, notably by numerous steps to raise awareness of Convention standards at national level and to enhance dissemination of its case-law as well as improving its internal structure and working methods, streamlining its procedures and innovating to increase efficiency and tackle its backlog. The Court has also reinforced its all-important dialogue with national superior courts.

5. As regards awareness raising/dissemination actions, the Court would cite its case-law translation programme and the extension of the HUDOC database to non-official languages (§ 32 of the CDDH contribution); expansion of the thematic factsheets and publication of further case-law Guides on Articles of the Convention as well as publications and videos on the admissibility criteria (§ 33 of the CDDH contribution); assisting member States in providing regular training sessions and study visits for judges and lawyers (§ 38 of the CDDH contribution) and co-operation with the European Union through the joint handbooks published by the Court and the European Union’s Fundamental Rights Agency (§ 68 of the CDDH contribution). At the same time the Court has developed an internal Knowledge Sharing Platform which seeks to provide a “one-stop-shop” for all jurisprudential and other relevant information relating to the different substantive articles of the Convention. It is proposed to externalise this platform in the course of 2020. The Court underlines the fact that its awareness raising activities, while extremely necessary, consume the resources of Judges and Registry staff and necessarily affect the time devoted to case-processing.

6. With a view to further facilitating the implementation of the Convention at the domestic level and pursuing judicial dialogue the Court established the Superior Courts Network. The considerable expansion of this network from its inception in October 2015, to its current membership of 87 superior courts from 39 States attests to the appetite at the domestic level for information on the Court’s case-law.

7. The central focus of the Interlaken reform process was concern about the high number of applications brought before the Court and the growing backlog of cases. The Court has assisted the CDDH in their analysis of the Court’s backlog with a report on “The development of the Court’s caseload over ten years – Statistical data for the CDDH (February 2019)”\textsuperscript{6}.

8. As highlighted by the CDDH the different measures being taken by the Court have led to a dramatic decrease in the number of pending cases before the Court from 160,200 at its highest point in September 2011 to 60,150 cases on 1 November 2019 (§ 70 of the CDDH contribution). However, it should be noted that this reflects principally the reduction of the backlog of clearly inadmissible cases (from 101,800 on 1 September 2011 to 6,200 in December 2019). This was made possible by recourse to the Single Judge procedure and the setting-up of the Filtering Section in 2011. As a result of these measures, the Court has been able to deal with new incoming Single-Judge cases on a “one in one out basis” for the last five years (§ 94 of the CDDH contribution). The importance of these measures lies in the fact that they enable the Court to devote more time to new, difficult and nonrepetitive cases. However, as the Court has repeatedly stressed, the right to lodge an individual application remains the cornerstone of the Convention system and while filtering is, for the reasons explained above, essential, it does not constitute a goal in itself.

9. The Court draws the attention of the Committee of Ministers to the number and scope of the measures taken to deal with the high case-load, namely (i) extending the availability of the Court’s applicants’ page on its Website in at least one official language of each member State since 2014 (§ 75 of the CDDH contribution); (ii) revision of Rule 47 of the Rules of Court in order to manage more efficiently the influx of incoming applications (§ 78 of the CDDH contribution); (iii) fine-tuning of its priority policy (§ 97 of the CDDH contribution); and (iv) the introduction of a highly automated workflow system developed by the Registry’s IT department (§ 106 of the CDDH contribution). The Court would highlight the fact that there are limits to what can be achieved in relation to managing the high case load through the Court’s efforts to continually improve working methods.

\textsuperscript{6} See “The development of the Court’s case-load over ten years – Statistical data for the CDDH” of 27 February 2019, document CDDH(2019)08.
10. The Court agrees with the CDDH’s assessment that all actors in the Convention system need to continue to address the question of the remaining backlog of repetitive cases (§ 113 of the CDDH contribution), some 34,600 cases as of 1 January 2020. The Court cannot resolve this problem alone. In particular, States Parties must address the underlying structural issues which result in the applications being brought. The Court stresses the crucial importance of States Parties providing effective remedies at the domestic level. Clearly, the availability of such remedies would have an important effect on the number of applications lodged at the Court. As to measures taken by the Court regarding repetitive cases, the Court wishes to highlight the setting up of the “well-established case law” procedure (“WECL”), which was further developed into the WECL fast-track procedure (§ 111 of the CDDH contribution). As a result repetitive applications have been processed more quickly and efficiently. The pilot-judgment procedure remains an important tool for dealing with structural and systemic violations.

11. The Court still faces a serious challenge in dealing with Chamber cases which are particularly important for the development of the Convention system as many raise new issues regarding the interpretation and application of the Convention (§ 120 of the CDDH contribution). There are currently just under 20,000 applications pending before a Chamber. In response to this number of applications, the Court has introduced new working methods and procedures, namely the immediate simplified (IMSI) communication procedure (introduced in March 2016) and the dedicated non-contentious phase of the proceedings (introduced on a trial basis as from January 2019 and extended until the end of 2020). The increased recourse to friendly settlements and, in appropriate cases, to unilateral declarations, is intended to provide faster and more effective redress to applicants thereby enabling the Court to concentrate resources on applications which it considers a priority. With this in mind, the Court invites the Committee of Ministers to modify its Rules of Procedure to allow for supervision of the execution of unilateral declarations. Nevertheless, the Court stresses that given its current resources it has great difficulty in dealing adequately with the backlog of non-repetitive cases.

12. The Court has also had increasing recourse to the notion of broader WECL, according to which non-repetitive Chamber cases which can be decided on the basis of established case-law can be dealt with by three Judge Committees under Article 28 § 1 (b) of the Convention. 2,225 applications were identified as broader WECL in 2018 and roughly 2,997 in 2019. While further time is needed to assess the full impact of these measures, it is clear that while they do undoubtedly increase efficiency, they will not in themselves resolve the outstanding backlog problems.

13. The Court will continue tirelessly to explore new means of reducing the backlog while at the same time seeking to ensure that it is able to deal with at least the most serious cases in good time. Thus, for example the “single gateway” project is underway to establish a link between filtering and the knowledge sharing platform which will ultimately allow for the automatic extraction of relevant data in respect of identified complaints. Further evolution of the Court’s IT system and applications remain crucial for its continuing capacity to cope with the volume of incoming cases. It is important to keep abreast of new technological developments which can and must be harnessed in order to pursue this goal.

14. The Court will also continue its dialogue with Government Agents designed to identify and promote best practices for resolving structural issues but also to investigate other strategies for dealing with non-repetitive “historical” cases and groups of non-repetitive cases which may be suitable for a non-contentious approach. In this connection it has been proposed to set up a joint discussion group with the Government Agents. Dialogue with applicants’ representatives, civil society and National Human Rights Institutions is also of particular importance for the Court. Furthermore, the Court has and will continue to intensify its cooperation with Council of Europe monitoring bodies to ensure a harmonized approach.

15. However, there is no single miraculous solution to the backlog and there is also a limit to what the Court can achieve through introducing new working methods without further resources. The continued reduction at least in real terms of the Court’s budget over the last years has reduced the Court’s capacity to make further progress. An insufficient number of lawyers to deal with the pending non-repetitive cases mean that although cases are being continually processed, the backlog cannot be effectively reduced. More lawyers are also required to work on the new competences of the Court. The States Parties have committed to providing sufficient resources (paragraph 52 of the Copenhagen declaration). The Court calls on States Parties to ensure that sufficient resources are allocated to the Court to allow it to fulfil its core task of processing and adjudicating in good time the applications which it receives. The credibility of the institution and the Convention system must not be undermined by the length of proceedings before the Court.
16. One concrete result of the Interlaken process has been the entry into force of Protocol No. 16 extending the Court’s jurisdiction to giving advisory opinions. In addition to promoting judicial dialogue with national superior courts, it is to be hoped that ultimately it will contribute to implementing Convention provisions more effectively and preventing breaches of the Convention at the national level. It represents an important “cultural” change in how the Convention system operates and is perceived.

17. Effective execution evidently plays a critical role within the Convention system not only in terms of the direct impact of judgments but also in reducing the number of future applications by eliminating the root causes of violations. This is particularly important in cases where the pilot judgment procedure has been applied, given the structural and systemic problems at issue. The ongoing dialogue between the Court and the Department for the Execution of Judgments of the Council of Europe should be encouraged with a view to reducing overlap and increasing synergy.

18. Dealing with cases linked to armed conflicts - and in particular inter-State cases and the high number of individual applications generated - is also a major challenge for the Court (§ 122 of the CDDH contribution). These cases are particularly time-consuming for Judges and Registry staff. The Court is currently implementing the recommendations of its own report on the more efficient processing of inter-State cases prepared by the Committee on Working Methods and adopted by the Plenary in June 2018. A redacted version of this report was shared with the CDDH in June 2019. As more experience is gained in processing inter-State cases, working methods can be evaluated and fine-tuned. The Court underlines that all issues relating to the processing of inter-State cases, including the admissibility of evidence and the establishment of the facts, remain exclusively within the Court’s competence.

19. Turning to the question of the Convention in the European and international legal order (§ 140 of the CDDH contribution), the Court stresses that, in any given case, it must be a matter for the Court to decide on the interaction between the Convention and other branches of international law in the independent exercise of its judicial function. The Court also considers that dialogue between the universal and regional human rights mechanisms is one of the most powerful tools to enhance consistency in the case-law and practice. With this in mind, the Court continues to take into account the relevant case-law of other international courts, not least the International Court of Justice, the International Criminal Court and the Court of Justice of the European Union. It also maintains close contact with, inter alia, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, the African Court of Peoples and Human Rights and the United Nations Human Rights Committee.

---

20. The Court supports the CDDH’s call for improving the selection procedure and the election process of judges at the Court to ensure the highest quality of candidates for the post of Judge at the Court (see § 132 of the CDDH contribution). Transparency in the selection of candidates is essential in the Court’s view. Positive measures taken by Member States in relation to former judges after their mandate ensure that there are excellent candidates to the post of judge at the European Court of Human Rights.

21. In this latter regard, the Court welcomes the recommendations of the CDDH in relation to the Committee of Ministers addressing the issue of the situation of Judges at the end of their mandate (§ 134 of the CDDH contribution). The independence and the quality of the judges at the European Court of Human Rights must be a key priority not only for this Court, but for the whole of the Council of Europe. It is the Court’s view that the subject should not be viewed as a personal issue of postmandate employment for particular Judges, but rather as an issue of institutional independence. This question is crucial to maintaining the independence of the Court’s judges, preserving their impartiality and thus the quality of the Court’s judgments. As such, the Court underlines the close links between the independence of the Court’s judges and the independence of domestic judges and considers it essential to deal with all applications which reveal threats to the independence of domestic judges with a high degree of priority and particular diligence. Problems encountered by former Court judges after the end of their mandate have largely arisen as a result of the single nineyear term of office. The Court calls on the Committee of Ministers to consider the adoption of a Recommendation in relation to the recognition of service of a judge of the Court at the end of his or her mandate. For those who return to the public sector, for example, the time spent at the Court by the former judge should be taken into account for career advancement purposes. The aim of the proposed Recommendation would be to strengthen the independence of the function of judge at the Court, to ensure that the best candidates apply for the post of judge and to strengthen subsidiarity. In any event, returning to a domestic position (whether in the judiciary, the civil service, at university, as a lawyer, or in another field) should not be jeopardised by a career as a judge at the Court. Further questions which the Recommendation should address are post-mandate employment, immunity, and preventing disguised reprisals. The Court’s Committee on the Status of Judges is currently finalising a report on the situation of former Judges after the end of their mandate which it intends to submit to the Plenary for their consideration in deciding on the most appropriate follow-up action.

22. As to further action which may be taken by States Parties, the Court calls on the Committee of Ministers to encourage the remaining States which have not yet ratified Protocol No. 15 to the Convention to do so. Ratification of Protocol No. 16 should also be encouraged by those Member States which have not yet done so.

23. In addition, the Court welcomes the recent initiative of the EU Commission to relaunch negotiations on the accession of the European Union to the European Convention on Human Rights which is necessary to consolidate the place of the Convention in the European legal order.

24. The Court shares the CDDH’s broad conclusion that the Interlaken process was crucial for the system in that it provided the foundations for the system to evolve further to meet the remaining challenges without a new major revision of the system. The CDDH has recognised that the Court has made maximum use of the procedural tools and resources available to it. Indeed, the contribution sets out extensively the large number of initiatives and reforms which have been undertaken to optimise procedures and reduce backlog. The Court, in consultation with the Government Agents, is constantly evaluating these new procedures and working methods and will continue to do so, as it will continue to explore new solutions, notably by exploiting new technology. The CDDH also acknowledges that if the different reforms are to achieve their full potential, the Court must be allocated sufficient resources, which the States Parties have committed themselves to provide.

25. In conclusion, bringing this chapter in the Convention system’s history to a close does not mean that the different actors in that system can be complacent about its future. The Court has just celebrated its 60th anniversary in 2019 and as it prepares to celebrate the 70th anniversary of the European Convention on Human Rights in 2020, it cannot but endorse the CDDH’s assessment that the Convention system remains of vital importance for peace, rule of law and democracy in Europe. Yet it should also be recognised that the system remains fragile and vulnerable to different challenges. The Court’s core mission of processing and adjudicating cases in good time should not be endangered by insufficient resources. The end of the Interlaken process in no way diminishes the need for dialogue between the Convention actors, in particular the Court and the States Parties.
FOLLOW-UP DECISIONS ADOPTED AT THE MINISTERIAL SESSION
ATHENS, 4 NOVEMBER 2020
Securing the long-term effectiveness of the system of the European Convention on Human Rights

Decisions

The Committee of Ministers,

On the occasion of the 70\textsuperscript{th} anniversary of the European Convention on Human Rights (the “Convention”), underlining the extraordinary contribution of the Convention system to the protection and promotion of human rights and the rule of law in Europe, and to the implementation of the Universal Declaration on Human Rights, as well as its central role in maintaining and fostering democratic stability across the Continent;

Reiterating its firm and enduring commitment to the Convention system;

Reaffirming the fundamental importance of the right of individual application to the European Court of Human Rights (the “Court”) as a cornerstone of the Convention system and the responsibility of the respondent States to resolve the systemic and structural human rights problems identified by the Court in its judgments;

Emphasising the importance of the principle of subsidiarity, and the related doctrine of the margin of appreciation, for the implementation of the Convention at national level, and of the concept of shared responsibility between the States Parties, the Court and the Committee of Ministers to ensure the proper functioning of the Convention system;

Welcoming the work undertaken by the States Parties within the Council of Europe in the Interlaken Process, which has significantly contributed to timely and tangible developments in the Convention system;

Welcoming also the effective measures adopted in this decade of reform steered by the Committee of Ministers, particularly the Court’s efforts which include the latter’s use of the pilot-judgment procedure, efficient filtering of applications and accelerated adjudication of repetitive cases based on well-established case law;

Underlining the importance of the dialogue between the Court and national courts, including through the Superior Courts Network, aimed at ensuring an exchange of information on Convention case law as a means of developing an enhanced understanding of their respective roles in carrying out their shared responsibility for applying the Convention;
Recalling further the measures adopted by the Committee of Ministers, in particular the new procedures increasing effectiveness and transparency of its supervision of the execution of the Court’s judgments;

Underlining that the highest degree of consistency and clarity of the Court’s judgments contributes to the effective and rapid implementation of the Convention by the States Parties;

Emphasising also the importance of national human rights institutions, Ombudsman institutions, equality bodies and other human rights structures in the implementation of the Convention, and the valuable contribution of civil society organisations to the promotion and protection of the rights enshrined in the Convention;

Resolved to ensure the continued effectiveness of the Convention system:

1. agreed that, whilst no comprehensive reform of the Convention machinery is now needed, further efforts should be pursued by the Council of Europe as a whole to ensure that the Convention system can continue to respond effectively to the numerous human rights challenges Europe faces, including through the efficient response of the Court to pending applications;

2. called upon all States Parties to give full effect to the principle of subsidiarity by complying with their obligations to secure to everyone within their jurisdiction the rights and freedoms defined in the Convention, to abide by the judgments of the Court rendered against them, to ensure the promotion and effective implementation of the Convention, and to translate and disseminate the Court’s case law at national level;

3. noting that Protocol No. 15 was opened for signature over seven years ago, urged the State Party which has not yet done so to ratify it;

4. invited the States Parties to consider signing and ratifying Protocol No. 16 to the Convention with a view to further enhancing the interaction between the Court and national courts, thereby reinforcing implementation of the Convention, in accordance with the principle of subsidiarity;

5. invited its Deputies to consider the legal and practical aspects of the Court’s proposal to supervise States’ compliance with their obligations pursuant to unilateral declarations;

6. in the interests of the effectiveness and credibility of the Convention system, called upon all Convention actors to continue to guarantee the highest standard of qualifications, independence and impartiality of the Court’s judges; agreed to consider further means to ensure due recognition for judges’ status and service on the Court and providing additional safeguards to preserve their independence, including after the end of their terms; and invited the Deputies to evaluate again by the end of 2024, in light of further experience, the effectiveness of the current system for the selection and election of the Court’s judges;

7. emphasised the importance of allocating sufficient resources to the Court so it may accelerate the handling of pending cases;

8. urged all member States to ensure that the Committee of Ministers’ Recommendation CM/Rec(2008)2 on efficient domestic capacity for rapid execution of the European Court’s judgments is given full effect;

9. agreed to continue to enhance the efficiency of the process of supervision of execution of the Court’s judgments, particularly its Human Rights meetings, by further developing its working methods and means available, including by appropriate recourse to political leverage to deal with cases of non-execution or persistent refusal to execute the Court’s judgments, and agreed on the importance of sufficient resources for the Department for the Execution of Judgments;

10. encouraged the development in this context of enhanced synergy with the Court as well as with the other relevant Council of Europe stakeholders, in particular with the Parliamentary Assembly and the Commissioner for Human Rights;

11. equally emphasised the importance of maximising the potential of the Council of Europe to support States Parties in the execution process and in the implementation of the Convention at national level, including through co-operation projects such as the HELP Programme (Human Rights Education for Legal Professionals), and by developing synergies with the knowledge sharing platform developed by the Court, in order to facilitate Convention-compliant adjudication by national courts;

12. encouraged States Parties which have not already done so to consider the establishment or strengthening of effective, pluralist and independent national human rights institutions;

13. welcomed the contributions made by States Parties to the special account set up by the Secretary General to allow the Court to deal with the backlog of all well-founded cases, and to the Human Rights Trust Fund, whilst encouraging further contributions;
14. underlined the benefit of the continued practice of secondments of national judges and high-level lawyers to the Court’s Registry and encouraged States Parties to pursue their efforts in this respect; and encouraged them also to consider the secondment of national judges or officials to the Department for the Execution of Judgments;

15. welcomed the resumption of the negotiations on the accession of the European Union to the Convention;

16. invited its Deputies to evaluate the first effects of Protocols No. 15 and No. 16 after five years from their respective entry into force, and reiterated the importance of the ongoing intergovernmental work on national implementation of the Convention, with a view to assessing the developments at the Ministerial Session in May 2021.
During the first decade of this century, the States Parties to the European Convention on Human Rights started a process of reform of the system of the Convention, given the continuing rise in the caseload of the European Court of Human Rights. The starting point was a High-level Conference which took place in Interlaken (Switzerland) on 18-19 February 2010 to give political guidance towards the long-term effectiveness of the Convention system.

Since the Conference called for an evaluation, by the end of 2019, of the measures adopted in this respect by the various stakeholders, the Committee of Ministers entrusted its Steering Committee for Human Rights (CDDH) with the task to prepare such evaluation by an analysis of:

i) the measures taken to secure the effective implementation of the Convention at a national level in the phase before applications are lodged at the European Court of Human Rights;

ii) the measures taken regarding applications pending before the Court, and

iii) the measures taken to secure an efficient execution of the judgments of the Court.

This publication presents the Interlaken Declaration and the CDDH report. It also includes the comments provided by the Court on the CDDH contribution as well as the relevant decisions taken by the Committee of Ministers at the Ministerial Session on 4 November 2020.